What Sultan Abdul Hamid has done for the instruction and enlightenment of his people is the admiration of every one who visits Turkey. It is not my intention to recapitulate here what I said last year in London in a public lecture delivered in Exeter Hall, but devoting continual attention to this subject I can state with full confidence that if the Turks continue steadily on the way inaugurated by their present ruler, and if political complication does not offer any hindrance they will soon reach a level of culture by which they may secure a firm basis of mental and economical development and future political existence. "It is for this purpose," said the Sultan one day to me, "that peace is now the object of my desire; peace alone can cure the manifold evils and shortcomings of the past; order and security can only be introduced by civil officers trained and educated in the school of modern social and political life." In accordance with these views it is gratifying to find at present hundreds, nay, thousands, of young Turks earnestly striving to acquire the rudiments of the European languages and science. A new spirit has taken hold of the whole people; the language and literature have undergone an essential change: whilst I am writing this paper, I have on my table various Turkish books and treatises on social economy, history, astronomy, geography, &c., which are sent to me for review, and some of which are really admirable. Of course there is much, very much, to be done yet in the way of public instruction, for the great bulk of the people is totally ignorant and neglected, but educational progress does not permit of leaps and bounds, and we are only doing justice to the praiseworthy efforts of Sultan Abdul Hamid in mentioning that he is sincerely bent upon the amelioration and the mental development of his subjects.

Where the actual ruler of Turkey meets with the sharpest criticism is decidedly in his policy of holding aloof from all alliance with any of the European Governments, and the somewhat rigid measures he applies in the Home rule of his country. As to the former we have to consider before all the rather doubtful effect of close alliances in the past and the danger in the future. Quite recent historical events have shown that the Porte had more to suffer from the hands of her so-called friends and well-wishers than from the aggressions of her old enemy. These deplorable results have quite naturally roused suspicion and a well-justified cautiousness, and we cannot wonder if Ottoman statesmen for a long time hence hesitate to cast in the lot of their country with any of those dubious allies, and prefer to protect the interests of the Empire according to their own notions and at their own discretion. In fact they cannot risk any other new experiment, for another war of the same issue as the last one would deprive Turkey altogether of any choice and ruin her entirely.

As to the second objection raised against the personal rule of the Sultan, and particularly against the Police system spread like a net over the whole Empire, I beg to remind the reader that Turkey is an Eastern country composed of men of different creeds and nationalities, who abhor each other and are ready to fall upon each other at the slightest loosening of the grip of the Government; in fact, of Orientals easily excited and fanaticised, who cannot stand comparison with Western people accustomed to liberal institutions. Only dreamers, ignorant of the cruel testimony of practical life, could think that a free constitution would fill up at once the gulf deepened by many centuries of religious animosity and widened by the hard rule of the conqueror over the conquered. No! such a thing would be even in Europe a sheer impossibility. And in reference to the charge of ruthless despotism laid upon Sultan Abdul Hamid I will quote his own words. He said to me one day: "In Europe the soil was prepared centuries ago for liberal institutions; and now I am asked to transplant a sapling to the foreign, stony, and rugged ground of Asiatic life. Let me clear away the thistles and stones, let me till the soil and provide for irrigation because rain is very scarce in Asia, and then we may transport the new plant, and, believe me, nobody will be more delighted at its thriving than myself." As to the much-rebuked Police system and to the host of spies paid by the Sultan, I beg to remind the reader that this host exists only in the fertile imagination of the inhabitants of Pera and Galata, and perhaps also in the brain of Turkish Nihilists, for that species is likewise represented on the Bosphorus. In Pera and Galata, those gathering-places of European adventurers, the most absurd rumours are credited and thence diffused over Europe; in fact, these goodly representatives of our kith and kin could hardly exist without inventing bewildering and startling news, if for no other purpose than to furnish material for hungry newspaper correspondents and credulous diplomatists. In some Pera circles they told me of twelve hundred, in others of sixteen hundred spies paid by the Sultan. Spies are suspected in all classes of foreign and native society, on the Tramway, in the church, in the public garden and even in one's bedroom; but on enquiring closely into this matter, need I say that the whole was a gross exaggeration, and that secret agents are employed only by certain court officials in furtherance of their dirty dealings and intrigues which are well-watched by the Sultan, but which can hardly be frustrated by him so easily as people in Europe imagine.

It would lead me too far indeed were I to dwell on all the absurdities spread in Europe respecting the personality and the government of the present Sultan. I am fully aware of having exposed myself through these lines to the charge of being a flatterer, and of seeing everything in roscate colours. Well, the discrepancy between my experiences and those of others will be easily explained by a proper estimate of the different means of observation at my disposal. Turkey is separated only by a few days' railway journey from Europe, but the Turks themselves are as distant from, and as inaccessible to Europeans as they were centuries ago. Let us approach them well-armed with linguistical and historical information, and without pre-conceived notions or prejudices and I am sure the experience of many travellers will tally with my own. Foreign visitors to Turkey will then learn that a talented, gifted, and patriotic ruler like Sultan Abdul Hamid can accelerate the march of civilisation, but cannot work wonders by transforming suddenly an Asiatic society into a European one. We did not emerge suddenly from the gloomy shadows of mediæval barbarism and ignorance into our present state, and we cannot expect Asiatics and Mahomedans to do a work in decades for which we required centuries. We must not shut our eyes to the deplorable conditions under which Turkey is labouring; we must not lose sight of ruined villages, neglected roads, decaying towns, choked harbours, and an impoverished population; but we can be, nay, we must be, indulgent, and instead of always finding fault with the Mahomedan Turk, whilst we are ready to pardon the cruelties committed and vices practised by his Christian neighbour, we really should begin to discard all political bias in our judgment of an Eastern prince and of his people.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

RAMA BAI THE ROYAL SUTTEE.

Translated by Mr. H. A. ACKWORTH, B.O. C. S.

Hearken ! I sing the witness
Which former times afford
How cherished patient Ramabai
Her god-descended lord,
And how the righteous Nana
The laws of heaven ador'd.

Hearken ! The gods had bless'd him
With gems beyond compare,
Viswasrao, Madhoorao, and he Narayanrao, made up the three,
Who died a direful destiny,
A cluster rich and rare.
And twixt the younger two so strong
The love, their story might belong
To those twin lords of ancient song,
Whom the same mother bare.

How was the double emerald split ?
I know not, nor can mortal wit
The secret dark declare.

Madhoorao on his throne of state,
A peaceful prince, in Poona sate ;
No army muster'd, but his hand
Unsworded stretch'd o'er all the land.
The foeman shrank before his fame,
Vast tribute to his treasury came ;
Surat, and Bessein's lofty wall,
With sword undrawn, before him fall ;
Kolaba seized, before him flee
The banners of the Portuguee ;
The Angria's sails were torn, and they,
The captive chiefs, in Poona lay ;
Madhoorao's fame transcends the stars,
They vainly gnaw their prison bars.

Hearken ! I sing the witness, etc.

Deep as the ocean's depth profound
Which shipman's plummet may not sound,
The prince's judgment pass'd the ken,
His deeds the power, of mortal men.
Skill'd leader of his horse was he,
He march'd for Theoor merrily,
The rattling kettles clang'd with glee
Behind him and before :
In howdah ceil'd with royal state,
And fram'd with glittering glass he sate ;
An elephant upbore
The stately load, and stepp'd along
Majestic through the shouting throng,

While sounded shrill, and loud, and long,
The trumpets' deafening roar.
Hearken ! I sing the witness, etc,

The prince from Poona with his spouse,
To Theoor came to pay their vows ;
Before the god Gunputti there
The lady promise plied, and prayer ;
The sacred image to enfold
She vow'd with pure and solid gold,
His coronet with gems should shine
A crest of gold should crown his shrine,
" If, heavenly lord, thou give
" To me the bracelet dower, and deign
" One year prolong my husband's reign,
" One year to let him live."

So pray'd she, and the turbans set
With work of gold, and gemm'd aigrette,
Or pearl, or emerald plume,
She offer'd, and with weeping eyes
Implor'd the mercy of the skies
To mitigate her gloom.

That night an answer came in sleep,
A dream disturbed her slumber deep,
And Gunputti stood by :
" Not mine the power, or mine the deed
" Thy husband's life to spare or speed,
" On Shriputti rely ;
" Count me but lord of ' modaks' child,"
The vision vanish'd as she smil'd,
And so the night went by.

Hearken ! I sing the witness, etc.

Next day, that Wednesday dark and drear,
The lady left her anxious bed,
She sought her lord, his tent was near,
Alas ! her noble lord was dead.
But never tear bedimm'd her eye,
The lovely lady Ramabai ;
With firm and rapid step she trod,
Her vow once more before the god,
Her latest vow to pay,
Through the glowing gate of fire
Which open'd from her husband's pyre,
To tread the darksome way.
For through the land the summons went
Of pious Ramabai's intent,
And east and west the call was sent,
And speeded south and north ;
With sacred basil haste to deck
Her friends their lady's graceful neck,
Cast off the gauds of worldly pride,
Her final garb she bade provide
For that dread journeying forth.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

She yielded to Gopeeka's prayer
 Narayenrao to summon there
 And Raghoba they call ;
 How youthful prince may best behave
 She taught with many a precept grave,
 And Raghoba with solemn word
 She charg'd his nephew's throne to guard,
 Word that should fruitless fall !
 Calmly she check'd the tears that fell,
 Calmly she bade her last farewell ;
 And while the assembled crowds proclaim
 Their Madhoo Rao's beloved name,
 And shout through heaven his glorious fame,
 Calmly she went to meet the flame,
 And bless'd them one and all.
 Hearken ! I sing the witness, etc.

Thus Ramabai prepared to tread
 The footsteps of her husband dead ;
 In showers the leaves of gold were flung,
 In every ear the drum beat rung,
 While all the air was dim and sweet
 With fragrant powders, as was meet,
 And all the Peshwa's host array'd
 The sad and solemn scene survey'd.
 On Moola's banks the lady stood
 High by the pyre, absorb'd of mood ;
 Worshipp'd the Gourds—on Kashi's shore,
 By Gunga's sacred stream brimm'd o'er,—
 Then, while all people held their breath,
 She mounted on the stone of death,
 And clapp'd her hands : the signal giv'n
 Fierce rush'd the roaring fire to heav'n,
 And high her spirit soar'd,
 In Indra's bark divine upheld
 Such boon her piety compell'd,
 Like Sulochana, side by side,
 She grac'd the heavenly portals wide,
 With her beloved lord.
 Hearken ! I sing the witness, etc.

NEWS AND OUR COMMENTS.

SEVEN thousand Hindus of Calcutta and the Suburbs have, through the Lieutenant-Governor, memorialized the Viceroy to reconsider the last orders with a view to the maintenance of the holidays on the occasion of the great Doorga Worship Festival. It reached Darjeeling on the 4th instant. On the 8th the Lieutenant-Governor forwarded the memorial to the Governor-General in Council. It will reach tomorrow, but as they are all pious and strict observers of the command as to God's day, it will we fear not be taken up before Monday. Would that the gods of Olympus might relent and grant their favour with godlike celerity, and send the news on the wings of the lightning !

THE Chairman of the Corporation has taken fifteen days' leave commencing from the termination of the Doorga Pooja holidays. He avails himself also of the Pooja holidays and goes to Delhi.

The 12 days' Dussehra vacation having ceased to be public holidays, what will be the Pooja vacation in the municipal office? Not being of "the offices under the Government of Bengal," it is not entitled, under the Notification in the Gazette, to the subsequent four days which have been granted to the Government offices with certain exceptions in addition to the six days' public holiday. Under the Municipal Act, the Chairman is required to be present at the office every day "except upon such holidays as shall be allowed by the Government." The Municipal office must therefore remain open on other days than public holidays. Under the loose wording of the Act, it seems doubtful whether Government has the power to make a special reservation in favour of the Corporation. At any rate, in the event of assuming such a power, Government must notify the fact if it means that the Municipal office shall have the same holidays as in the Secretariat. In his zeal for curtailment of the Doorga Pooja holidays, Mr. Cotton overlooked the direction in the Municipal law of which he had the working for a time. Will he now rectify the omission? This shows that the care said to have been given to the last consideration of public holidays in Bengal was not enough, nor by any means comprehensive. It is lucky, therefore, that the question is being reopened, if not to fix the Municipal holidays, at least to the prayer of seven thousand of Her Majesty's Hindu subjects, so that the clever Secretary may take advantage of the occasion to attend to the municipal side thereof.

THE Officiating Collector, Mr. W. Maude, of Customs thus notifies the approaching Doorga Pooja holidays :—

"The Doorga and Luckhi Poojah holidays this year are from the 18th to the 29th October inclusive.

On the 18th, 24th, 25th and 29th the Custom House will be open during the usual hours for transaction of all business.

The Treasury on these days will be open.

On the 20th, 21st, 22nd and 23rd, and 27th and 28th the Custom House will be opened on notice being given free of charge from 11 A.M. to 12 noon for entering or clearing any vessel that it may be required to enter or clear, and for the issue of bills-of-entry or shipping bills covering free goods from or to the same.

The Treasury on these days will be closed."

Mr. Maude ignores the Poojas altogether, and though not entirely, the orders of Government as contained in the notification of public holidays, declaring six days' close holiday. He sticks to the arrangements of the last year, unmoved by recent orders.

The Officiating Comptroller-General, Mr. Stephen Jacob, also improves upon the orders of Government and notifies :—

"Notice is hereby given that the Public Debt Office, the Government Savings Bank, and the Government Account Department at the Bank of Bengal will be open for the transaction of business and for the receipt and payment of money on Government account on the following days during the Doorga Pooja holidays :—

18th, 24th, 25th and 29th October 1890.

The Paper Currency Office at Calcutta and the Comptroller-General's Office will also be open on the above dates."

The orders and instructions of the Governor-General-in-Council are, that only the Office of Issue of the Paper Currency Department and the Office of the Comptroller and Auditor-General will remain open but partially as regards Hindu employés and hours of business.

The proposed departure last year was not so general. That notice ran thus :—

"Notice is hereby given that the Public Debt Office and the Government Savings Bank at the Bank of Bengal will be closed from the 30th September to the 10th October both days inclusive, but the Bank of Bengal will receive and pay money on Government account on all days on which the Bank is open for business.

The Paper Currency Office will also be open to the public for exchange of notes and coin up to one o'clock P. M. on the 30th September, 8th and following days in October."

THE Agricultural Conference met on the 6th instant, Dr. Voelcker read his report on his tour. He of course strongly supported the proposal to bring out an agricultural expert, but other competent men were required for the actual teaching. One was immediately wanted for the Dehra Forest School and another for the Poona Agricultural College. The Conference of course perfectly concurred.

They then discussed the subjects of experimental farms, the method of conducting experiments, and the formation of practical agricultural classes. Everything, it was agreed, should be regulated and controlled by the advice of the agricultural expert under the instructions of the local Governments. They insisted on the introduction of agricultural primers into primary schools, with a view to ultimate reform of the educational system, and ended with a suggestion for providing high class education in the sciences connected with agriculture.

THE fee for the admission of candidates to the examination for appointment as Deputy Collectors, to be held in March next, is Rs. 15 not Rs. 10 as previously announced. That for Sub-Deputy Collectorship is Rs. 10.

THE Collector of Customs, Calcutta ; the Commissioner of Police, Calcutta ; the Chairman of the Corporation of the Town of Calcutta ; and all District Officers have been supplied with certified measures under the Measures of Length Act II of 1889, and they will have charge of them for the purposes of the said Act. The form of the certificate under Sec. 5, is required to be—

"It is hereby certified, under the authority of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, that this measure is of the length of the standard yard, and that the measures marked thereon as a foot and an inch are of the length of the standard foot and standard inch, respectively."

HERE is a pocket edition of enlightenment:—

"A light can be obtained without the use of matches and without the danger of setting things on fire by taking oblong vial of the clearest of glass tightly corked containing therein a piece of phosphorus as big as pea with a little of pure olive oil heated to the boiling point filling it to a third. The light can be used by letting in air by the removal of the cork and recorking. The whole empty space in the bottle will become luminous, and the light obtained will be a good one. As soon as the light becomes dim, its power can be increased by opening the bottle and allowing a fresh supply of air to enter. In very cold weather it is sometimes necessary to heat the vial between the hands to increase the fluidity of the oil, and one bottle will last all winter. This ingenious but old-fashioned contrivance may be carried in the pocket, and is used by the watchmen of Paris in all magazines where explosives or inflammable materials are stored."

GENERAL Vannonsky, the Russian Minister of War, recently celebrated the 50th anniversary of his entrance into the Army. He was congratulated by the Czar, who, in a letter, said the country undoubtedly requires a strong military organization, not for aggressive purposes but to maintain the integrity and honor of the Russian Empire and—for Peace. Happy old—fogey, to be prized by a Czar!

A NATIVE lad of nine years of age in Jubbulpore is charged with the cruelty of burying alive his younger brother three years old. The child prisoner admits the deed, and accounts for it saying that he had to beg for a living and, as it would be inconvenient to take the younger brother with him in his rounds, he found a safe place for him in the pit. This is mere boyishness. Children very often offend against law without intending to break it, in mere sport or freakishness.

TWO Baboos at Calcutta charged their cook with stealing some money. In the course of the evidence, it appeared that the accused had confessed to them under threats and a promise of pardon. Thereupon, the magistrate Mr. Handley rightly discharged the cook and gently rated the accusers for extorting a confession. Servants may be a bad lot, but masters ought to be better. These Baboos are justly exposed for their pusillanimity.

THE appointment of Nirmal Chunder Sen, son of the late Baboo Keshub Chunder Sen, as an Assistant Sub-Deputy Opium Agent, Behar Opium Agency, is Gazetted. But why is the Babooling done out of his titular inheritance? He is described as Mr. instead of Baboo. But if Baboo be such a bore, why not Bhai? That at least will stamp the Brahmo family and even recall the father.

AT Wheeling, West Virginia, two men stepped upon a wire connected with a powerful dynamo and were dead immediately. Two men more, in attempting to lift the bodies from off the wire, sustained severe electric shocks. At Cincinnati, a lineman inadvertently grasped a live wire and was instantly killed. His hand had been almost burned off. Modern life is hedged in by horrors and dangers and death in countless forms.

Holloway's Pills and Ointment.—Whilst the inhabitants of our great cities suffer from the effects of overcrowding and all its attendant evils, both physical and moral, the more robust and energetic emigrant will in his turn be liable to suffer in his new home from the want of ready skill and the great medical resources of his native land always at command. The best advice a friend can give is for him to take a supply of these well known remedies as part of his outfit, for by attention to the easily understood and yet ample directions which accompany each box and pot he will never be at fault when taken ill or under any adverse sanitary conditions of life.

NOTES, LEADERETTES, AND OUR OWN NEWS.

AT Tipperary, on the 9th instant, during the investigation of the charges against the Police for assault on Mr. Harrison, M. P., and others, the Bench disallowed certain evidence as irrelevant. The prosecutors objected to the composition of the Bench and withdrew. This news is immediately followed by the sailing for America the same evening of Messrs. William O'Brien and Dillon while their trial had not ended at Tipperary. They were out on bail of one thousand pounds each which has been estreated. At a conference opened at Dublin on the 6th, it was resolved to do the utmost to assist the evicted tenants and to neglect nothing which might assist in overthrowing coercion. At that meeting, Mr. Parnell was unable to attend. Seven Irish Members of Parliament, including Messrs. Dillon and O'Brien were appointed to advocate the cause in the New World. At the trial of the Irish Members of Parliament at Tipperary, the defending counsel, another M. P., used disorderly language and was ordered to withdraw from the case. There was an uproarious scene and the Court was adjourned, after being cleared.

SIGNOR Crispi continues to speak on the political situation. On the 8th, at Florence, he said that the Italian Government is bent upon maintaining its alliances with the other Powers, and appealed to the country to support the Government in combating the Irridentist party.

THERE were apprehensions of a rising at Buenos Ayres on Monday night. All the troops were called out, and the fleet was ready for action. The President took refuge in the barracks at midnight. The telegram concludes with the peaceful message that the city, notwithstanding, was tranquil on the 7th.

THE News from New York is disastrous. One of the sections of the immense Dupont Gunpowder Mills at Wilmington, Delaware, caught fire, and five of the other sections followed suit from the concussion caused. Ten people are said to have been killed and twenty, including the head of the firm, injured. The disaster spread to the distance of half a mile, demolishing houses within that area. The country around is desolate.

ALL is up with the cult founded in our times by Brigham Young. The Mormons confess themselves beaten, not in argument but by brute force. And they accept defeat with a good grace. At a Conference at the Salt Lake City, they have adopted the abolition of polygamy. They succumb to the tyranny of the majority and the persecution of a hollow morality. The people that for ages maintained slavery cannot tolerate Mormonism, and the Civilization that pays for and embraces and even officially regulates a colossal prostitution, shudders at the idea of more wives than one.

IRON is failing in Scotland. The production of pig is twenty thousand tons less weekly. The majority of the furnace-men have been paid off, and numbers of them have started for the North of England. There is also a dispute about wages, with the result that of the 84 furnaces of this time last year, only 9 now are in blast, the rest being damped.

THE cotton trade is looking up. The American cotton crop is expected to exceed that of any previous year.

THE old American tariff expired at midnight of the 5th October. The rush of vessels at the Customs was great, the steamer Etruria entering with immense cargo just one minute before midnight. The customs receipts were consequently proportionately heavy, being indeed the largest ever collected.

THE preceding day there was a demonstration at St. John's, New Brunswick. The Hon. Sir John S. David Thompson, Dominion Minister of Justice, made a speech and said that the United States wished to coerce Canada into lowering the Union Jack, but her loyalty to the mother country was unswerving.

ENCOURAGED by the new Tariff Act, organizations are being made in the United States to work iron and tin.

THE meteorology of the last week has, in general, been continued in this. The sun is reigning with fire as it were, if not also with sword. The waters are drying up and the overflowing rivers and rivulets and lakes and fens are going down. Occasional showers at places have moderated the intense heat. But the more important moderating influence has been a change in the wind. There is so little of it that, in the still prevailing heat, the change is scarcely recognised, except by the sensitive plants of mankind. But the rainy season is over.

THE Dacca District has, of late years, acquired an unenviable notoriety for storms and tornadoes. At the end of last month, there was a three days' hurricane, and rain at Narainganj. The frail native sheds of bamboo and grass were, of course, blown away. The people believe that men and cattle have been captured by the wind and carried up in the air, nobody knows where.

THE copious showers at the close of last month, have gladdened the heart of the cultivator at most places. In the Gya District, a bumper rice harvest is expected and the cultivation of the Rubbee is being pushed forward with vigor.

THE appreciation of silver is viewed with alarm in Russia. Already, there is weeping and wailing in the South. At Odessa, the great wheat mart on the Black Sea, the rise in the rouble is expected to end in the bankruptcy of most of the merchants and dealers. For the first time in fourteen years, says a contemporary, the Odessa exchange on London was quoted before the last mail left at 8 roubles the sovereign.

Meanwhile, the imposition of high and almost prohibitive duties is deranging the import trade throughout the Empire. The new tariff again is looked upon as a bad omen for peace. It is a defiance of the other Powers. It appears to be a measure of retaliation against Germany. Some years back, Bismarck made the banks of Germany to wash their hands of all Russian stock. The result was a decay of Russian credit and, of course, depreciation of the rouble. Great was the distress and alarm in Russia, which was constrained to borrow largely in Western Europe, in order to maintain her credit. France, with her turn for sentiment even in finance, came chivalrously to the rescue of her ally. Russian funds are now as high in repute as ever—particularly in Paris, where everybody invests in them.

A strange commentary all this on the supposed peaceful effects of the meeting of the Emperors!

ON the 8th October, the Eurasian and Anglo-Indian Association held their annual meeting under the presidency of the Governor. President Gantz read a report of steady progress, the effect of which was rather marred by a jeremiad against the better classes of Eurasians for their neglect. Dr. Emma Brainerd Ryder, an American lady from Bombay, who seconded the motion of the Catholic Bishop Mayer for adoption of the report, made a long speech on Eurasian female education. Lord Connemara would not let the Eurasians count from his presence on any cash from Government. The prudent President was not to be baulked. He had resolved to make capital of the ruling milord, and he knew how to. He was sure of the presence of such greatness among them making the Eurasian concern palatable to the shabby-gentility of European and the absurd sanebloquism of Eurasian society, and attractive all round.

THE satisfactory progress report of the Kidderpore Dock Works, week after week, has been rudely interrupted by the news of movement in the walls. Here is the official report to the Vice-Chairman of the Port Commissioners by the Superintending Engineer Mr. J. H. Apjohn:—

"I much regret having to report serious movements in the walls of Dock No. 1. On the morning of the 7th instant it was observed that the East wall was slightly bowed. By the same evening this bowing had increased to 10 inches, and by the following morning I found that it had gone still further, and making careful measurements ascertained at the worst place, the upper edge of the wall, to be 5 feet 10 inches out of the straight, the movement extending a length of about 1,400 feet. Since the 8th there has been no further movement in the East wall. This wall has been tilted over as well as moved forward. It was built with a batter of $\frac{1}{2}$ an inch to a foot in vertical height, and at the worst place it is now as nearly as possible vertical, and the height being 36 feet this will account for 18 inches of the movement at coping level, showing that the thrust of the backing has actually forced the wall 4 feet 4 inches over the ground.

Early on the morning of the 9th, the wall at the south-west corner, a length of 450 feet, was moved out to a distance of 10 feet in the centre. Since then, there has been no further mischief, and the long straight portion of the West wall continues in a true line.

At the time of the failure the centre of the dock had been excavated to within a few feet of the full depth, but, as had always been the intention, a berm had been left against the walls 16 feet above bed level, which berm it was proposed to dredge out after water had been let into the dock. It was believed that this berm would be sufficient to enable the wall to withstand the pressure of the backing; but unfortunately it has not proved so."

The Engineer, however, takes a hopeful view, and is ready with a remedy. He goes on:—

"The thing to be done now is, of course, to prevent further mischief, and the obvious course is to let water into the dock with the least possible delay. Fortunately, the works are so advanced that this can be done without any serious interference with the completion of them, and I hope by Sunday morning to be in a position to begin filling up from the river, and by Monday, to have water standing within about 6 feet of coping level. The gates of the double passage between the Tidal Basin and the Dock will then be closed, and the former being pumped out, the small quantity of work remaining to be done to the graving dock entrances will be completed. Of course, warning will now be taken, and heavy banks will be left against the tidal basin walls to be afterwards dredged.

Disappointing as this movement of the walls no doubt is, there is no cause for panic or apprehension of total failure. As far as I am aware, no dock walls in the world, unless founded on rock, have entirely resisted the thrust of the backing, and in every case they show more or less of a bow. In the Southampton Docks, recently opened, one of the walls has moved much more seriously than ours have done.

If no further extensive movement occurs within the next two days, I fully expect to be able to make the walls so that they will hardly at all show the movement which has occurred. In the case of the south-west berth, where the quay has been thrust out at its centre for a distance of 10 feet, it will be necessary when the water is in to erect a light coffer-dam in front and cut it back, at the same time strengthening it behind, but the East wall can be worked to a straight coping line from above water level."

Others who seem to know do not share in the same hopeful view of Mr. Apjohn. "Civis" writes to the Indian Daily News:—

"It is not difficult to show the cause of this threatened collapse having occurred even before the excavation of the dock had been completed; and whilst in the accounts which have already been made public that cause is stated, no explanation seems to be forthcoming for the mistake that has been committed in backing the walls with the most dangerous material that could have been selected, namely, the treacherous silt and so-called blue clay, which contracts and swells with every change in its degree of moisture, and exerts a pressure-force which experience has already too often shown to be practically uncontrollable. The damage which has occurred, and appears to indicate the possible failure of the dock, is bad enough; but the remedy proposed would appear to be specially designed for accelerating the collapse of the walls. To let water into the dock whilst the walls were whole would form, as Mr. (now Sir) A. M. Rendel pointed out, a more than doubtful support to those walls, since the wall itself, becoming immersed in water, would lose a portion of its weight which is its chief strength. Attention was also called to the fact that by letting water in front of the wall, it would also be let into the back either by stoppage of the drainage or by percolation, or by both. What then can be the result of letting water into the dock now, when the wall is broken, and free communication exists between the front and the back? The answer is only too simple. The wall will, in a very short time, stand with a fluid on both sides of it, with the probable result that it will slide, sink, fall prone, as a culmination of disaster—the result of error upon error!”

“Merchant” also writes to the same paper and dives deeper, despairing of a wet dock for Calcutta :—

“They are now going to let in water to support the walls. Water is a bad master, and a treacherous servant. A large body of it between rent and torn walls means great leakage both to the river and Tolly’s Nullah. The present collapse is the result of the leakage of the rain water caught in the dock. But leakage means percolation outwards, which again means motion in the stratum carrying the leakage. This in turn means the softening and carrying away of the soil, and the creation of a temptation to subsidence which cannot be resisted, and if there be further subsidence—that is a mysterious and miserable IF. It looks very likely that Calcutta will not get her docks this time, and will have to be content to undo the spoiling of the river channels in the port—if she can. You see ‘if’ pervades all questions relating to the docks; but I have an instinct that it does not pervade the question of commission.”

And this is the way of these hasty Indian public works—the hastier the more costly and with the larger opening for patronage! And this is the way that the money of the taxpayer goes who is wholly unrepresented in the Government!

MR. Justice Handley of Madras thus remarks on the Bill to amend the Cattle Trespass Act, 1871 :—

“I have only to remark on this Bill that it is open to the objection, which I have often expressed, to legislation by Gazette notification. It may be that in this case no other means can be devised to carry out the objects aimed at; but, if possible, I think, it would be infinitely preferable to amend the Act. It seems almost absurd to invest the Local Government with the power to run ‘pigs’ into ‘cattle’ by notification.

The objection I have to such legislation is two-fold—1st, that it makes it extremely difficult for those whom the law affects to know the law; 2ndly, that it makes the work of the Magistracy and the Criminal courts generally more difficult and increases the chance of mistakes.

I have no remarks to offer on the details of the Bill.”

Here is the key to modern legislation in India. The several legislatures legislate by delegation of power, and have dwindled into departments of Government. The departmental orders having the effect of law, are not sufficiently published, and Her Majesty’s subjects are punished for ignorance of such laws, for ignorance of law is no defence in an action for breach of law. The mere publication in a Gazette is no promulgation in an ignorant country like India. Even Judges and Magistrates are habitually innocent of laws until these are brought to their notice in the course of any enquiry or litigation. The Gazettes are not freely circulated and, as a rule, are not studied. The orders of Government are notified in such a manner that it is not always intelligible to the uninitiated. The Gazettes should be properly edited to make them truly useful if not valuable.

OUR people are so deficient in energy and enterprise, that whoever shakes himself off the dream of the Land of Lotos is deserving of every encouragement. To open a shop is no great matter even in sleepy Bengal, but there are shops and shops, and there may be enterprise and originality even in the retail trade. We have therefore received with pleasure, and do not hesitate to notice, a business pamphlet entitled Lahiri, Ray & Co.’s Catalogue and Price Current of country-made and Foreign Perfumeries. The concern is native on the face of it. The language, like some of the articles offered, is “country-made.” The literary man on the establishment forgot that “country” would have done just as well, nay, better. If “country-made,” why not “foreign-made”? The true counterpart of foreign is Indian. Besides, “country-made” is not necessarily the same thing as country used as an adjective, and, in respect of perfumes, is decidedly misleading. And what a cruelty to be ever licking poor perfumery into a horridous plural! This is not quite the trifle that our people might take it for. Such a flaw repels respectable men. It suggests a want of care or of judgment—shows undue confidence and a neglect to take proper advice. Such exhibitions are, we regret to say, common, even in publications of greater pretensions than trade circulars. And it arises from a lamentable cause. We, most of us, do not know English—the genuine article—and, what is worse, we do not know that we do not know. But after all, the English is not the point in the matter under notice.

The most noticeable feature of the business is the “country-made perfumery,” by which is meant not the toilet requisites made in this country—not essences, waters, and oils in vogue in the West manufactured in India—but Oriental perfumes in fashion among Orientals. Herein is the peculiarity of this establishment, and hence our patriotic interest in it. It is easy to overlook the distinction, and those who are not accustomed to observe the conditions and characteristics of different arts and industries, will be apt to miss it. But all who are familiar with the geography and ethnology of the internal commerce of India, will at once recognise the departure taken by Messrs. Lahiri, Ray & Co. There are perfumery shops in plenty in China Bazaar and Chadney Chowk and elsewhere kept by Hindus of Lower Bengal, where Piesse’s and Rigaud’s and Delcroix’s goods are sold under queer names. But this is the first shop opened by any of them for the sale of Indian perfumery. For the first time, we now see a Bengali Hindu in this line. Macaulay in a memorable sentence has declared that the millions of Bengal do not supply a single recruit to the Army. It is easier far to meet with Baboo Sepoys than to discover a Bengali perfumer—even a mere dealer in indigenous scents. In our long experience, we knew one Baboo who, forty years ago, set up a manufactory at Ghazipore and lost by it. Now that one of us has come forward and opened a store, we ought all of us to support him.

We hope Lahiri and Ray will prosper. They have already introduced their countrymen of Bengal to a new trade. If they succeed in their business, they will achieve, without suspecting it, a great work. They will do something to preserve to the country an interesting art. What is more, they will restore a lost sense to their countrymen of the Delta. The invasion of Europeanism in all forms has deprived our poor people of their finer nose. It is no small degradation to the children of Brahma to neglect their superb national perfumes for the ruder alcoholic preparations of Christendom. Is there any water out of paradise superior to the Rose Water of Ghazipore? Attars have more body and may appear far too rich, but a little of them goes a great way and keeps a long time; they are simply abused by extravagance and vanity. And then, they are not to be used indiscriminately—there are times and seasons for attars, as for everything. Used with judgment and moderation, they are a continual delight.

Messrs. Lahiri offer 11 different kinds of attars for several qualities, priced from Re. 1-4 to Rs. 8 per tola, and five oils and two waters, of sorts.

MR. Evelyn P. Pearce writes to the Englishman on the cruelty to animals. He says :—

“No one, who has passed through a village, or garden bazar, on bazar day can fail to have observed the sickening sores, on nine out of ten of the pack animals, especially ponies. These unfortunate animals are bought up by moodys and Cachar traders, and worked as long as they can put one foot before the other, in spite of wrung withers, sore backs, and rope galls that make one shudder to look at.”

It appears that there is no law to prevent this habitual brutality. A kind hearted planter of Cachar, Mr. Swainson had drawn the attention of the Deputy Commissioner to the subject. He was told in reply that the Magistracy had no power to interfere, there being no Act for the prevention of cruelty to animals in force in the Assam provinces. The Deputy Commissioner, however, offered to forward with his recommendation to the Chief Commissioner any petition that Mr. Swainson might get up, signed by himself and his neighbours, requesting that the Act might be extended to Assam. Accordingly, a petition has been signed by all the European residents of Cachar. Mr. Pearce now calls upon his brother planters to come forward and strengthen Mr. Swainson’s hands, by forwarding similar petitions from their different districts.

We hope good Mr. Pearce’s appeal will meet with a quick response. It is by such kindness to the weak and the helpless that the handful of Europeans scattered about in the outlying and obscure parts of the country can best recommend themselves to God and man. They will prove their superior civilization and offer an improving example to the multitudes of ignorant and barbarous men around them. We hope something more. Mr. Pearce has principally his own class and fellow-Britons in view. But the movement need not be confined to planters or Europeans. It ought to interest the whole Hindu and Buddhist world. We for our part call upon the rising generation of the natives under the jurisdiction of the Chief Commissioner, to show that it is capable of other views than Congress demonstrations and badgering planters.

Nor is the complaint confined to Assam. The heart-rending scenes which Mr. Pearce has witnessed in Cachar or in other districts of Assam, may be seen everyday in every village market throughout the Bengal Provinces. What a pity that there are so few men like Mr. Pearce and Mr. Swainson, among natives and Europeans, to take pity upon God's helpless creatures—our dumb brethren!

THE Warburton prosecution of the Tribune ended yesterday for the moment with the conviction of the proprietor and editor. The printer was let off with an apology. The prosecution, with Afghan vindictiveness, pressed for imprisonment of both Sirdar Dyal Sing and Baboo Sitalakant Chatterjee. It was argued that the proprietor was liable in that he did not stop the publication of the defamatory matter, even though the editor accepted full responsibility. The counsel for the Sirdar contended that the proprietor could not be liable unless it was shewn that the libels had been published on his authority or with his knowledge or consent. The Magistrate found the proprietor not guilty of defamation but guilty of abetting the sale of copies of the Tribune containing the defamatory articles, and fined him Rs. 2,500. The editor was found guilty of defamation and fined Rs. 1,000. The orders have been appealed against. In the meantime, Mr. Warburton prepares himself for a suit for damages. In the absence of the judgment, it will not be proper to express any opinion. But one obvious remark suggests itself. In the face of the apology published by the editor, the punishment seems excessive; at any rate, that on the proprietor disproportionate. The feeling in the Punjab is such that even this severe measure is a mercy. Mr. T. J. Kennedy is a good man, and as a magistrate has always discouraged prosecutions for defamation. Almost any other magistrate in the Province would, we suspect, have sent the poor Baboo to jail, if not the Sirdar too, pour encourager les autres.

It is to be regretted that the attempt at a compromise failed. The court threw out a suggestion and there was not wanting a common friend to follow it up. Mr. Nicoll, the Secretary of the Amritsar municipality, volunteered in the cause of peace and proposed the terms, to wit, the withdrawal of all matters that had not been touched upon by any Resolution or order of Government and compensation of Rs. 5,000 for wounded feeling. The amount was considered too low by one side and too high by the other and the negotiations fell through. From a remark that fell from the bench, it seems that the court doubted the genuineness of the spirit of apology and thought that a substantial reparation for wounded feeling was required.

We hope the Tribune will publish a full report of the case in a durable and convenient form. We wish some one might start a subscription.

"NASO" writes to the Englishman of yesterday:—

"Another arrival since yesterday—a northerly breeze—and with it, I noticed, when passing Government House Garden last night the unmistakable jungly smell with which all who have to pass that spot have become painfully familiar of late years.

Have the Councillors in the palace been unaware of it all this time? Or have they accepted it after their summer picnic in the hills, as indispensable with Calcutta air? The continuance of the nuisance reflects little credit on the sanitary authorities, however, who might be expected to exercise special diligence to secure healthy surroundings for a Viceroy, who has already suffered severely from fever.

The annoyance to the public is, of course, of secondary or no importance."

The breeze arrived earlier in the week. As for the smell, it is not dependent on the northerly breeze—even to passengers on the road south of Government House—but on the nose. That is always a rare possession in great cities—the rarer the more crowded and unsavoury the city. In Calcutta, it seems to be non est, seeing that the citizens—the White Town men in particular—have been quietly enjoying the stink for so many years. No community in the possession of sound olfactory nerves would have allowed the nuisance to stand for six months. Such citizens would have revolted against the rank jungle, even though a nobleman and viceroy were the cultivator thereof. It is satisfactory to find that there is at least one organ of smell in Calcutta in tact, though not quite at, for it took some days' continual pricking to rouse "Naso." We passed the same way on Monday evening, and were assailed by the stink from the tame wild vegetation, and we there and then made up our mind to kick up a row over this gratuitous infliction.

Another nuisance, though of a more temporary kind, which distresses people in the same neighbourhood, is caused by the renovation of the Calcutta Horse Guards' and Mackintosh Burn & Co.'s premises.

The poisonous smell of verdigris used in painting the exposed wood work, in spite of the pond in front, is truly sickening to passengers along the Esplanade Row. Is the drying paint an irremediable evil?

REIS & RAYYET.

THE DOORGA POOJA HOLIDAYS.

A most earnest appeal from the Hindu inhabitants of Calcutta and its suburbs has gone up to the Viceroy against the curtailment of the Doorga Pooja holidays. It is a bulky memorial bristling with facts and practical details, and it makes out a very strong case for the aversion of the doom. It is not too much to ask for retention of the holidays at the minimum fixed by the Government after repeated and deliberate consideration. The size of the document is but proof of the strong feeling of disappointment which has been caused by the unfortunate decision of the Government of Bengal on the subject. The memorialists deny the authority of Pandit Mahes Chunder Nayaratra on questions relating to religious and domestic observances, and it is indeed ludicrous that the Government should rest their decision upon the verdict of a man whose very orthodoxy as a Hindu is a questionable thing in the eyes of his countrymen in general. Indeed, the Pandit himself is far from consistent with himself in the finely drawn distinction he makes between religious ceremonies and social festivities. His communications on the subject are a medley of compromises. While to "curry favor" with the Chamber of Commerce, he is ready to go the length of striking off the Sasthi from the Doorga Pooja—the adhivās or initial image-worshipping day, the jolly old soul would yet retain some of the holidays on the ground of their popularity as days of festivity. It would have been something if he had applied the same severe standard to the holidays as a whole, that he does for obvious reasons to the grand national festival. But that would have involved him in the execration of both the more religious Hindus and the holiday merry-makers—a measure of heroic consistency for which his shifting ways never prepared him. So he makes a desperate effort to gain the latter's favor by recommending the retention of days which are more necessary for purposes of pleasure than worship. As for instance, in regard to the Dol Jatra, the Pandit throws overboard his own standard of purely ceremonial worship, and adopts the noisy saturnalian way of its celebration as the test of its popularity. In respect of the Kali Pooja also, the same shifty policy is observable. He says that if one day be allowed for this festival, it should be the day for the water-immersion of the goddess rather than the day of worship. In fact, these indications of vacillation on the part of the Pandit only show how hard it is to draw a line between the ceremonial and the hospitable or festive part of a worship. There are other misleading statements and inconsistencies in the Pandit's letters to the Chamber of Commerce, and the memorialists have rightly devoted their main attention towards showing up the frail character of the support on which the Government have ostensibly relied.

The memorial, though aimed at securing the interests of Hindus in general, is especially drawn up as an argument for Hindu employes in Government offices which are expressly debarred from the full number of the holidays. The hardship entailed on this class of public servants is peculiarly painful, and they represent by no means such a small number as is generally supposed. The heads of the excepted offices are in strong sympathy with the anti-holiday movement, and in spite of express orders from the Government that the convenience of the Hindu clerks should be consulted as much as possible, arrangements are already being made so as to compel the attendance of a needlessly large number of them. In the face of the Government order recently promulgated, the Currency office has been ordered to be kept open as usual, the hours of business are not to be contracted, and far from 3 or 4 Hindu clerks being required in all the offices taken together during the holidays, not less than 25 Hindus have already been ordered to attend in the Currency office alone. The best intentions of the Government are liable to this treatment at the hands of executive authorities, and all for a purely obstinate determination of a few foreigners to have their own way in this matter. The business done by European merchants during the holidays is little or nothing, as will appear, as the memorialists state, on enquiry being made at the Currency office, the office of the Registrar of Assurances, and the Government Account Branch of the Bengal Bank. The only class affected by the holidays is a small one of Christian tradesmen in Calcutta, but any inconvenience likely to be felt by them may easily be remedied with a little forethought and pre-arrangement in so shaping their Bills and Promissory Notes that the due dates might not fall within the holidays. At the most, the interests of such a microscopic number ought not to be allowed to outweigh those of "a far more numerous, though less influential portion of the community." These words under quotation were used by the Government themselves in emphasising their late just and impartial decision on the subject. Language could not be clearer than that in which this decision was delivered, viz., "that the inconvenience and loss which the mercantile community suffer from the existing state of things, great and serious as they are, cannot be remedied without inflicting a still more serious hardship on a far more numerous, though less influential portion of the community." It was a decision truly worthy of an Imperial Government and consistent with its noble traditions of religious neutrality. These words were penned, no doubt, with a mind to place the controversy finally at rest. To reopen the question after such a final settlement is nothing short of a scandal, and the memorialists have successfully shown that there is no justification or necessity whatever for such an extraordinary course. The Government of Bengal have made a clean surrender to the mercantile community, and it is "merely to uphold the zid," as the memorialists say, "of a few alien merchants" that a large class of Hindus are to forego their religious observances and their annual recreation.

THE POLICE.

Our police continues to decline in efficiency. Such is the opinion pronounced in the last Government Resolution on Mr. Veasey's report. A review of the work done by the police in 1889 shows, says the Lieutenant-Governor, that they have obtained no marked success in dealing with crime and that there has been a decided diminution of efficiency in the work done in sessions cases.

There was increase both in cognizable and in non-cognizable crime. Under cognizable crime, there were 316 murders, the largest number ever reached since 1880. The circumstances of some of these cases are painful enough and have no unimportant bearing on the social question which is now occupying so much public attention. They are thus noticed in the Government Resolution:—

"In perusing the brief accounts of important cases given by the Inspector-General, it is melancholy to note that many were due to quarrels between husbands and their youthful wives. In Hughli a school pundit, afterwards shown to be insane, hacked his wife, a girl of 13, about the head with a katari because she would not or could not satisfy his desires. In Nadiya a husband killed his wife, a sickly girl of 12, for refusing to cohabit. In Maldah a man throttled his child-wife, aged 11, because she could not satisfy his lust. He was treated with extraordinary leniency by the Judge, who gave him two months' imprisonment for hurt—a sentence enhanced by the High Court to two years for culpable homicide. In Hughli, again, a young wife of 15 refused to cohabit with her husband, and died from the effects of the savagery with which that husband and his two brothers branded her in and about her private parts. In the remaining cases of wife-murder the ages of the victims are not given, but a further case in which a girl of 14 was chopped to death by her father-in-law on suspicion of misbehaviour may be mentioned here."

An equally shocking case of wife-murder occurred in Rajshahye. Mr. Veasey notices it in his report as an illustration of the leniency with which such cases are dealt with by criminal courts:—

"A man chained his wife up and then handed the key to his kept woman, who set fire to the house and let her burn with it, refusing to give up the key when it was demanded. This atrocious crime was, in the opinion of the trying Magistrate, sufficiently punished, as far as the husband was concerned, by a year's imprisonment and fine on a conviction only for wrongful confinement, whilst the woman got an additional year on a further conviction under 304A. Eventually it found its way to the Sessions, where the woman was transported for life, whilst the sentence on the husband, light as it was, was made lighter, though there was evidence to show that he had removed all his property and was no doubt an accomplice before the fact."

As in murder, there is increase also in cases of dacoity, while the results of trials are even more unsatisfactory. Sir Steuart Bayley expresses his strong displeasure with this state of things, and observes that, discreditable as most of the statistics in the police report are, nothing more seriously reflects on their efficiency than the judicial results in dacoity cases.

The worst district for violent crime is Dacca, with Backerganj and Mymensing running next in the train. The Dacca Division has a notoriety for offences against the public peace. In the year under consideration, there was, indeed, an unprecedented decline from 512 to 377 in the number of rioting cases, but even with this great decline, the Division is all the same at the head of the list. As regards cases of murder, Dacca has the same unenviable pre-eminence. A marked feature of the statistics given in the Report of this crime, is usually the very large number of cases reported from the Dacca Division, in which serious crime is always prevalent. The figures for the district of Backerganj alone will bear comparison with those of the whole Divisions of Chota Nagpur, Orissa or Bhagulpur, while Mymensing is not far behind Backerganj. To give Backerganj, however, its due, it must be said that rioting cases do not show an increase, though any credit to which it may be entitled for this must be discounted by the fact that three bodies of punitive police have to be maintained for the tranquillity of the district.

Under theft and burglary, the worst division is Patna and the worst district Monghyr.

As regards the unsatisfactory percentage of convictions obtained in police cases, the Lieutenant-Governor concurs with Mr. Veasey that the results represent a large number of failures of justice. The reasons for these results in the Inspector-General's opinion are expressed in these forcible words: "The high standard of proof demanded, the latitude allowed to the advocates of accused persons, and the dilatory procedure so much in vogue are all obstacles well known and to be reckoned with in these provinces, whilst elsewhere they may be factors of less importance, but they would not exercise the influence they do if investigating officers were more careful and if supervision were more efficient."

On the subject of discipline in the police force, the following remarks of the Government are conceived in Sir Stuart's characteristic spirit of consideration, and the Lieutenant-Governor has hit the right nail on the head in exposing the light-heartedness with which young officers of the police punish subordinates, old enough to be their fathers and with far greater local knowledge and experience:—

"The percentage of officers punished departmentally shows a slight falling off, but is still very high. It is noteworthy that out of a total of 928 sub-inspectors, so many as 487, or over 52 per cent., should have been thus punished during the year. The Lieutenant-Governor agrees with Mr. Veasey in considering that minor breaches of discipline should, as far as possible, be dealt with departmentally, and that a resort to law in such cases should always be discouraged. But he also thinks that District Superintendents should not lightly, or hastily, fine their officers, who are, even at the best, far from being well paid; and generally, in inflicting punishments on their higher subordinates, they should not lose sight of the necessity of preserving their dignity in the eyes of the lower ranks. Sir Stuart Bayley is inclined to fear that sometimes injudicious severity does mischief and deters persons of respectability from offering themselves as recruits."

The Resolution discusses a variety of other matters relating to the work done by the police in the year under report. Great dissatisfaction is expressed with that work generally, and the tone of remonstrance which pervades the remarks of the Government is in marked contrast with the spirit of Resolutions of former years.

THE FOODS OF DIFFERENT RACES.

DR. A. J. Crespi has contributed to the Scottish Review an article wherein he has swept as into a sewer all the abominations which are used by men for food. Some animals feed on vegetables, others on flesh, others still use a mixed diet. Some live on grass, others on grain, others again on leaves, plants and trees. Some eat insects, others quadrupeds. Some subsist on fresh meat, others on putrid. Man maintains his preeminence by a catholicity of taste. Nothing comes to him amiss. He is simply omnivorous. He does not spare his own kith and kin. But not to keep our readers any more from the Doctor, let us see what he has to say on this head:—

"The most repulsive food which human beings could eat is man. Fortunately, cannibalism, although once very general, is now mainly confined to the most degraded tribes of the South Sea Islands and to some districts of Australia and Central Africa. Lindsay of Pitcottie relates that a man, his wife, and family, were burnt to death, on the east coast of Scotland for eating children whom they had stolen; and during the French Revolution the heart of the unfortunate Princess Lamballe was actually torn out of her body by one of the yelling savages near, taken to a restaurant, and there cooked and eaten. Human flesh is said not to be unpalatable, and this is confirmed by the horrible narrative given by Lindsay: he mentions that, as one of the girls was being taken to execution, she exclaimed, 'Wherefore chide ye with me, as if I had committed an unworthy act? Give me credence and throw me, if ye had experience of eating men and women's flesh ye would think it so delicious that ye would never forbear it again.' The Tannese of our day distribute human flesh in little bits to their friends as delicious morsels, and say that the flesh of a black man is preferable to that of a white one, for the latter tastes salt: other cannibals hold the same."

Dr. Crespi's calling man repulsive as an edible is little to the purpose, unless he had been accustomed to the fare. The Tannese—whoever they may be—know better. And their taste is supported by Tigers. Once these have an opportunity of eating a man, they continue to be on the look out for the same kind of dainty dinner. Dr. Crespi goes on:—

"The lion is eaten by some African races, although its flesh is in small favour with them, while the Zulus find carrion so much to their liking that, according to Dr. Colenso, they apply to food teeming with large colonies of grubs the comprehensive word 'uborni,' which signifies, in their uncouth jargon, 'great happiness.' David Livingstone tells us that the aboriginal Australians and the Hottentots prefer the intestines of animals, and he adds that 'it is curious that this is the part which wild animals always begin with, and that it is the first choice of our men.' The hippopotamus is another favourite meat of the Africans, when they catch it. Its flesh when young is tender and palatable; but it becomes very coarse and unpleasant with advancing years. The Abyssinians find the rhinoceros much to their liking; so they do the elephant, which is also eaten in Sumatra. Dr. Livingstone speaks of elephant's foot as excellent. 'We had the foot cooked for breakfast, and found it delicious. It is a whitish mass, slightly gelatinous and sweet, like marrow. A long march to prevent biliousness is a wise precaution after a feast on elephant's foot. Elephant's tongue and trunk are also good, and after long simmering much resemble the humps of a buffalo and the tongue of an ox; but all the other meat is tough, and from its peculiar flavour only to be eaten by a hungry man.' The elephants eaten during the siege of Paris were said to be a great success, and the liver was pronounced finer than that of any goose or duck."

In this country, the Kookies and Looshais are fond of elephant-meat. On one occasion an elephant dying at Agartalla in Tipperah, it was buried in a large pit for fear of the decomposed body poisoning the whole place. This simple measure of cleanliness was near leading to much bloodshed at the capital of the principality. A body of Kookies who were then staying there on a mission to the Durbar, who had doubtless been meditating on a cheap but grand banquet for months as they observed the sick elephant gradually proceeding to its inevitable end, now rose in angry protest and demanded what the stupid Bangals—as they courteously call the civilised people of the plains—meant and by their insane mischievous act. They were either not understood or disregarded. Before revenging themselves on the officials, they went to the Maharaja, whom they revered, to deliver their ultimatum. At the Rajbari they were both listened to and understood and their grievance redressed.—Dr. Crespi writes:—

"The people of Zanzibar should stand high for the comprehensive character of their cuisine. Among other delicacies are a small monkey and a fruit-eating bat. Locusts are relished by the Bedawin of Mesopotamia and some other eastern tribes; they are placed on strings and eaten on journeys with bitter and unleavened bread. The Jews, who were prohibited eating many kinds of food which our larger experience teaches us are palatable and wholesome, as well as some that we do not venture to touch, were permitted to have their fill of locusts. The locust is an article of diet to this day, but only of the very poor; it is thrown into boiling water, and eaten with salt. To live on locusts and wild honey conveys a more accurate picture of extreme poverty and frugality to a traveller in the East than to any one else. Locusts, however, are not always cooked; sometimes they are eaten fresh. They are said to have a strong vegetable taste; the flavour largely depending, as might be expected, on the plants on which they have been feeding. Dr. Livingstone, who showed his common sense by not being fastidious, considered them palatable when roasted. Some of the savage tribes of South America are accused of eating everything that by any possibility will support human life. Humboldt saw children drag enormous centipedes from their holes and crunch them between their teeth; but insects and their larvæ are favourite foods in many parts of the world. In the West Indies a large caterpillar, found on the palm-tree, is reckoned a great delicacy—and why not, let us ask? To our civilised taste, however, carrion and bad eggs seem foods which no human being could relish. Not so—the Chinese prefer stale to fresh eggs, and the Pariahs of Hindustan fight greedily with the dogs and jackals for putrid carrion. They would relish the roussette, a kind of bat plentiful in Java, which the natives value; but although its flesh is white, delicate, and tender, it generally smells strongly of musk. The Nagus also eat raw meat. Among the Greenlanders and the Eskimo the seal is an important food; and in spite of being coarse and oily, was formerly eaten in England. The porpoise was also an English dish, and its liver is, when fried, still, we believe, relished by sailors. Arctic explorers have found the walrus very palatable, and it is largely consumed by the Eskimo. The Japanese, New Zealanders, and the Western Australians consider the whale good eating; and the Eskimo highly approve of blubber and get through enormous quantities. The crocodile is greedily devoured by the natives of certain districts of Africa. Its eggs in taste resemble hen's eggs, with perhaps a smack of custard."

Raw meat is relished by the Kahars of Behar. Now for our final extract:—

"To come to our own country, where we do not eat sauerkraut and blubber, birds' nests and puppies, we shall nevertheless find some odd foods. The hedge-hog, a favourite dish in Barbary, and not disapproved in Spain, is eaten by gypsies; squirrels, too, are occasionally cooked in this country, and are most delicious and fully as palatable as jugged hare; at any rate we have ourselves stewed them, and we can testify that they are excellent. It is even said that frogs are often eaten in the north of England. In some parts of England snails are still eaten, not as ordinary articles of diet, but at stated feasts. We have in bygone days, when living on the borders of the nail-making districts of Staffordshire, seen men filling paper bags with snails to make soup, and we remember being told that they were excellent eating. The English prejudice against snails is singular, since, from time immemorial, considerable quantities have been collected round London and on the Kent pastures for export to France. In the latter country there is no squeamishness; most people there only regret that snails are too expensive to be indulged in frequently. In Covent Garden the common snail often appears for sale; the purchasers, however, are most exclusively members of the French, Austrian, and Italian colonies of London."

The moral of it all is that no nation has any reason to rail at another on its nasty eating. We are all in the same boat.

ROW OVER THE DAY OF REST.

SIR,—A war is going on in Hyderabad between Sunday and Friday; and as of old Juno and Venus contested for power and Carthage was the battle field, so of late Phœbus and Venus strive for supremacy and this Abode of Hydra is the scene of action. Phœbus has been for some time encroaching on the domain of Venus and demands his day (Sunday) to keep the sabbath, while Venus is determined to hold her own against the intruder and retain her day (Friday) for devotion. Courts presided over by Europeans, and there are many such courts, are closed on Sundays, while the rest take rest only on Fridays. But happy are those who enjoy two holidays in the week! I need not say how far this goes to interfere with work.

But to resume my parable: Jupiter promised success to Venus, and she got after all her shrines thronged by her devotees. Can not Jupiter who equally rules over the heavenly and the earthly powers and is expected to help Venus equally against her internal and external foes, command his local Mercurius to bow out Phœbus and restore Venus to her old privilege undisputed?

Troop Bazaar, 1st Oct. 1890.

THE CHARGE OF DEFAMING MEMBERS OF THE BAR.

The case in which Messrs. Kirkpatrick and Anderson, barristers-at-law and advocates of the Bombay High Court, charge a certain Kanjee Ludda, described as a broker and law agent, with defamation, was proceeded with on Wednesday (Oct. 1) at the Esplanade Police Court, before Mr. Cooper, the Chief Presidency Magistrate.

It will be remembered that Kanjee Ludda proceeded to the chambers of Lord Colin Campbell, barrister-at-law, on the afternoon of the 16th of September, and there requested the learned counsel to accept a brief in a Small Causes Court case, alleging that he would bring him briefs for business in the police and civil courts. Lord Colin Campbell, in anticipating the intentions of the broker, informed him that he was not to expect any commissions from him since it was contrary to the practice of the English Bar. Kanjee Ludda, in asserting that it was not unusual to give such commissions, mentioned the names of Messrs. Kirkpatrick and Anderson as barristers who gave commissions.

The complainants conducted their own case, while Mr. Shantaram Narayan and Mr. Shanjigiri defended the accused.

Mr. Kirkpatrick said he would like to say a word or two with regard to his case against the accused. He was a member of the Bar, and he complained that the accused had made a defamatory statement about him. As his Worship was aware, the Bar was a profession which had always prescribed for its members the observance of certain definite and well-known rules of conduct. These rules were unwritten, but were not the less binding and well recognised. One of those rules, and one of the most essential of them, was that under no circumstance should a member of the profession seek to attract business to himself by giving or offering to give an inducement in the shape of commission or reward of any kind to those who acted as intermediaries between him and his client. That rule was of the highest importance both in the interests of the public and of the profession. It had always existed in England, and had passed with the profession into India, and if it had been found desirable and necessary in England, it was surely most desirable and necessary in this country. The importance of this rule had been emphatically recognised by the Legislature, for by section 36 of Act 18 of 1879 it was made a criminal offence, punishable with fine and imprisonment, for a legal practitioner to give commission in order to procure business for himself. It was true that Act was not in force in the Presidency of Bombay. That he believed was due to the fact that the late Chief Justice, Sir M. Westropp, was opposed to its introduction here. He did not know why he opposed it. He was told that Sir M. Westropp thought it was (not) necessary. They all knew that Sir M. Westropp had the highest opinion of all ranks and branches of the profession of which he was the head. It was to be hoped that he was not mistaken and that there was no one among them who would so far forget what was due to himself and to the profession as to be guilty of an act which the Government in legislating for other parts of this country had considered so pernicious as to be induced to declare it a criminal offence. He knew what the feeling of the Bar of Bombay as a body was on the subject, and if in the presence of the Advocate-General he might presume to speak for the members of his profession, he would state publicly on their behalf that, although the Act was not in force, the rule was, and always had been, in force here; that they considered its strict observance essential both in the interests of the public and of the profession, and that any infringement of it by any member of the Bar rendered him liable to the severest penalties which it was in their power to inflict.

With regard to the facts of the case now before the Court, he complained that the accused had defamed him by stating that he had given commission. Lord Colin Campbell would prove the statement made by the accused. That statement was false, and he challenged the accused to prove it. He knew nothing of the accused. He was told he was a law agent. He had never at any time had business with the accused or with any member of his class. He challenged the accused to prove that he at any time or to any person had given or offered to give commission or inducement of any kind, or permitted any suggestion to be made to him on the subject. It might be said that a false statement of this nature by a person like the accused was a small matter and hardly worth a prosecution. It was a small matter no doubt, but what was said of him to-day might be said of others to-morrow, and the lie that was whispered or suggested to-day would, if uncontradicted, be repeated more boldly to-morrow, and by repetition would gain strength and substance, and come at last to be believed, and so in time a mischief might be done, for which it would be hard to find a remedy. For these reasons, and with the sanction and approval of the Advocate-General and the leading members of the Bar, he had taken these proceedings against the accused. He then called as a witness the Advocate-General.

The Hon. Mr. John Macpherson, barrister-at-law and the acting Advocate-General of Bombay, called, said: I know the rules and profession of the Bar. According to those rules and usages it is certainly not admissible for any member of the Bar to give commissions for professional work. If I knew any member of the Bar doing so, it would in my opinion lower his character immensely. If such conduct was brought to my notice, all I can say is I would take every step in my power to procure the Bar to pass an unfavourable opinion as to such conduct. And I have not the slightest doubt the Bar would do so. The statement that a member of the Bar had given commission I should think clearly defamatory.

Cross-examined by Mr. Shantaram Narayan: It is possible that outsiders may not know of such a rule. If the accused is a law broker, I should think he ought to know of the rule. I do not know whether the accused is a law broker, and I have never seen him before.

Lord Colin Campbell, the next witness called, said: I am a barrister-at-law, practising in Bombay as an advocate of the High Court. I know the accused.

Mr. Kirkpatrick: Was the accused in your chambers on the afternoon of the 16th of September?—Yes, he came to me at 3 o'clock that day. The accused came to my chambers accompanied by his brother Jeena Ludda, and he asked me whether I would take a brief in a Small Causes Court case, which was to come on the following day. In that case he said his brother was the defendant. I had some conversation with the accused about my fee, and finally agreed to go to the Court next day. The brother of the accused then left the room. The accused then told me that he was a broker, and that he would bring me briefs for business in the Police and Small Causes Courts. Hearing from the accused that he was a broker and warned by previous experience, I at once told him that he was not to expect any commissions from me, because it was contrary to the practice of the English Bar. He then began to argue the matter with me, asserting that it was not unusual to give commissions, and he proceeded to name Messrs. Kirkpatrick and Anderson and a native barrister as examples of barristers who gave commission. I said to him, "That is not true. I do not believe that Mr. Kirkpatrick or Mr. Anderson give commissions." After some further conversation, one of Mr. Payne's clerks entered the room accompanied by the accused's brother, and the conversation ended. On the 17th, after the conclusion of the case, in the Small Causes Court, I saw the accused. I took him aside and I told him that I had considered the statements he made the previous day with reference to Messrs. Kirkpatrick and Anderson, and that I had thought it necessary to inform the Advocate-General. By the advice of the Advocate-General, I was about to inform Mr. Anderson and Mr. Kirkpatrick what he had said about them. He admitted in the presence of Mr. Payne's clerk having made the statement, and said what he had heard from other brokers. I requested him to come to my chambers in the afternoon. He came accordingly. He expressed regret for what he had said and implored me to overlook his offence. I told him it was a very serious one, and it was not in my power to do so. I said, "You had better go to Mr. Kirkpatrick and ask his pardon." He continued to implore my forgiveness, and I then called my sepoy and told him to show the accused out of my room. (Laughter.)

Mr. Kirkpatrick: You are acquainted with the rules and usages of the Bar?—Certainly. It would certainly in my opinion amount to professional misconduct if a member of the Bar gave commission. In my opinion he would be guilty of conduct that might come under the definition of cheating in the Penal Code. He would certainly be guilty of dishonourable conduct.

Cross-examined by Mr. Shantaram Narayan: Lord Colin Campbell, the accused is not an English scholar?

Lord Colin Campbell : I think he speaks English remarkably well. I should say as well as any educated native. I believe he brought in Mr. Payne's clerk to give me instructions by Mr. Payne's permission. As far as I recollect, I said to him, "No English barrister gives commission." The accused then said, "Oh yes! Mr. Anderson and Mr. Kirkpatrick give commission." He mentioned another gentleman to whom I have already referred.

Mr. Shantaram Narayen : Did you mean to draw any distinction between English or other barristers when you said, "No English barristers give commission?"—No. I certainly did not wish to draw any distinction at all when I said, "I hope no English barristers give commission." The accused did not actually ask me for a commission. But I anticipated his intentions. There were two cases. The accused opened the conversation by telling me he was a broker.

Mr. Shantaram Narayen : This rule about barristers is known to the profession. Is it known in your opinion to outsiders?—I have heard the Advocate-General express his opinion on that point. I have not heard of any barristers being disbarred here for giving commission.

Re-examined by Mr. Kirkpatrick : Have you ever heard of such a charge being brought home to any barrister here?—No. I have no idea as to what the judge's opinion would be as to a member of the Bar being disbarred for giving commission.

Mr. Henry Clare Kirkpatrick then entered the witness-box, and said : In consequence of information from Lord Colin Campbell, I filed a complaint against the accused. The statement which Lord Colin Campbell informed me about had been made to him by the accused to the effect that I had given commission. This is false. I have never given a commission on any occasion to any person. I do not know the accused. I have never to my knowledge seen him until to-day. In my opinion a member of the Bar who is guilty of giving commission against which there is a rule well known to every member of the profession would deserve to be disbarred.

Cross-examined : If the accused apologised and offered never to act in this way again, I would forgive him. I have no reason to believe that my reputation is damaged, and I make this complaint to show publicly that this statement was entirely false. It is also to make it emphatically known that it is against the rules and usages of the Bar to give commission. If the lie was not contradicted, it would probably gain shape and strength, and perhaps be accepted at last as true. I instituted this prosecution in order to guard against a repetition of such a statement being made.

Mr. Shantaram Narayen : I understand, Mr. Kirkpatrick, that you are willing to withdraw this charge against the accused if he apologises.

Mr. Kirkpatrick : Yes, provided it appears in the terms of his apology.

Mr. Shantaram read the apology tendered by the accused, which runs thus :—"I hereby declare that the statement made by me to Lord Colin Campbell that Mr. Kirkpatrick has given commission on fees paid to him in respect to professional work is, so far as I am aware, absolutely untrue, inasmuch as I have no knowledge that such commission has ever been given by Mr. Kirkpatrick, and that the statement made by me to Lord Colin Campbell was made without any foundation whatever, and only in the hope and for the purpose of inducing Lord Colin Campbell to give me commission, and I now humbly and unreservedly apologise to Mr. Kirkpatrick for the said statement."

Mr. Kirkpatrick, in accepting this apology, was informed by Mr. Shantaram Narayen that the accused had possibly heard such false statements from other people which no doubt actuated him to express himself as he did to Lord Colin Campbell.

Mr. Anderson, on being appealed to by Mr. Shantaram Narayen as to whether he would accept the same apology, expressed a desire to go into the witness-box and express his opinion on the allegation made use of by the accused. Before doing so, however, Mr. Anderson addressed his Worship, and said : I am not at all satisfied with my learned friend who has treated the accused I think too leniently. I think perhaps he had been a little too good in the end. I feel rather warmly on a matter of this sort, and I feel the mischief which it is likely to create. A man in the position of the accused knows better the absolute falsity of such a treatment. I can only speak in defence of my English brethren with regard to the suggestion of the commission made use of by the accused. Nobody knows that better than the accused and the class of people to which he belongs. I do not wish to appear vindictive. The accused had absolutely no ground for making use of the statement under the circumstances. I will satisfy myself and uphold my honour and that of the members of the Bar by going into the witness-box and swearing to the falsity of the statement, and then allow the course to be adopted which my learned friend has taken.

Mr. John Caussmaker Anderson, barrister-at-law and an advocate of the High Court of Bombay, then stepped into the witness-box, and said : In consequence of the information I received from Lord Colin Campbell, I took proceedings against the accused. The allegation that I have ever at any time given or offered a commission to any person in professional business is absolutely without foundation and untrue. The suggestion has been made to me on rare occasions in the course of my professional career, and I have always advised the person who made it to quit my office with all possible speed. I consider that for a barrister to give commission is an act of the most grossly dishonourable nature, and should, and, I believe, would if it were proved against him, lead to him being disbarred.

Mr. Shantaram Narayen : Do you think that it would be equally dishonourable for a pleader to give commission?

Mr. Anderson : Quite so.

The same apology was tendered to Mr. Anderson and signed by the accused.—The Times of India.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

STANZAS

WRITTEN ON THE BANKS OF THE GANGES, ON THE OCCASION OF THE DUSHERA OR GANGAPOOJAH FESTIVAL.

BY THE LATE SHAMA CHURN DUTT.*

I

Is Gunga conscious of her natal day ! †
Behold what lovely aspect she assumes,
The wild and furious changed to sportive gay !
Young virgins deck her marge with flow'rs and blooms,
And sweet Kokiél the birth-day song attunes !
The shell now blown, the sonorous metal rung,
Midst joyous shouts and aromatic fumes,
Champak and Rose, in chequered garlands strung,
Are o'er her tranquil breast by reverend Brahmans flung.

II

These rites in honour of an aged flood,
An ancient relic of antiquity—
How do they tend in minds of musing mood
The fancy kindling, 'wake the sad dear memory,
Loved India ! of thy ancient days of glory,
Departed ever more ! When not, as now,
Deep sunk in base ignoble lethargy
Thy spirit slept—when not alas, as now,
The shameful stain of slave was branded on thy brow !

III.

Ah no, it was not thus my fall'n country—
That brow was then with Fame's bright halo crown'd ;
Thou wert the hallow'd shrine of Liberty,
Not more for beauty than for strength renown'd,

* Baboo Shama Churn Dutt was an Assistant in the Bengal Secretariat, who, after a useful service of the full term, retired on pension to live in the "backwoods" of the North Suburban Town. He would have found life insupportable perhaps with cards for only resource, were it not for the municipal feuds which divided the township. The forces of opposition against municipal administration precipitated into a Rate-payers' Association, of which Baboo Shama Churn Dutt became the scribe. He had been a different being. If he had not exactly been

Nourishing a youth sublime

With the fairy tales of science, and the long result of Time ; he had certainly been a youth of sensibility, with a romantic turn. He dabbled in verse, contributing not only to native magazines, but also the Englishman. He published before the Mutiny a thin little volume of fugitive pieces. But long before his death at Baranagar, about three years ago, keranigiri—clerkdom, with its drill and associations—had buried the old—that is the young—Shama Churn Dutt.—ED. R. & R.

† The Dusheera is the anniversary of the day on which Gahga is fabled to have been moved by the prayers of Bhagiratha, to descend from the Himalayas, to wash away the sins of mortals.

The gaze, the dread of wond'ring, trembling nations round.
Then wore thy Sons the hero's laurel wreath,
Nor dreaded foes, nor shunn'd the battle ground ;
Then loath to breathe the bondman's coward breath,
They dared to die the patriot-freeman's glorious death.

IV.

Nor then alas ! as now thy Daughters were Mere lifeless images of painted clay,
Or frigid marble statues, beautiful and fair
Alone to see, but with the quick'ning ray
Of love inanimate. Nor then thou lay
In intellectual darkness shrouded. Thine
Was ev'ry lore which near or far away
Enlightened and enriched the world—ay, thine
Was ev'ry heaven-taught Sage and ev'ry Bard divine.

V

Alas ! how changed ! Unhappy destiny !
Fall'n land ! 'tis Ind, but living Ind no more !"
Love, Freedom, Virtue, Learning, Poetry
Have long since bade adieu to once loved shore ;
And now save thine now murmur'ing, now loud roar,
All, Ganga ! all is still. My country dear !
Of thy great splendour and thy pomp of yore,
Thou now alas ! art but the dismal bier,
O'er which thy weeping Poet sheds the fruitless tear.

POMPEI.

I.

Think then that twice one thousand years have gone,
Since this gay Forum heard the last salute
Of friendly voices destined to be mute
For ever with the lapse of that day's sun,

And ask if we, whose shadows here are thrown
This morn of May, advance with firmer foot,
With will, more clear than theirs and resolute,
Through this strange darkness where our thoughts have grown.

Has Nature changed ? Ah no ! she triumphs still,
Like one who guards, less mutable than we,
The charm and passion of her younger day,

And smiling shows her bland translucent sea,
And dark and sinister the treacherous hill
Around whose crest her baleful lightnings play.

II.

And then I thought, for in such idle days
All thoughts besiege in turn the wavering mind,
How sweet it might be on this earth to find
What genial Fancy on these walls portrays,

A Life which leads us by all pleasant ways,
Which points to Song, his hair with rose entwined,
And Beauty with complacent eyes reclined
By careless Joy and kindling from his gaze.

Who has not yielded to a dream like this,
And cherished in his sense its afterglow,
Like fragrance of an evanescent bliss

Which sometimes Time relaxes to bestow,
Some fugitive caress, some touch, some kiss,
Which stays with man while years and memories go?

Capri, 1888.

NEWS AND OUR COMMENTS.

LORD William Beresford is come back and joined his post at Simla. Welcome!

THE Hon'ble Mr. Francis Law Latham, Advocate-General, Bombay, has purchased Gad's Hill Place, Rochester, famous as the home of Charles Dickens. The price is not stated.

SCIENCE is up to any feat. Dr. Michaelis, a scientific professor at Aix-la-Chapelle, is said to have taken out patents for the manufacture of Acetylaethylenphenylthiazinsaeure and its Aethylphenylshydrazinbernsteinsaeure. He ought at once to be created Mahamahopadhyaya ul Mahamahopadhyayas of the University of Dryasdustoborough of Houyhnhnmssthan, or given over for sacrifice at the hands of the Phonetic Spelling-reformers who will doubtless condemn him to get by heart a dozen Slavonic street directories.

THE successive Invasion of the Congress delegates has had one effect at least. Our orators have so bored the good people of England with India that they will have none of it—or as little as possible. Accordingly, the Calcutta Letters have ceased to be a feature of the Times. Only the telegrams are published.

IN reproducing from the Jessore Sammilani a collection of Rs. 1,573 for relief of distress occasioned by the recent floods, the Hindoo Patriot credits Maharani Surnomoyee with Rs. 300 of that sum and thrusts on her a new title—C. E. This condescension on the part of our contemporary is of a piece with that of Sir George Campbell, when as Lieutenant-Governor, out of the depth of his vast learning and long acquaintance with the manners of the people of India, he proposed to send the same illustrious lady—a Hindu widow—a present of embroidered robes and a pair of bracelets.

IT is rumoured at Bjelina, in Bosnia, among the peasants of the district, that Baron Albert Rothschild has been sentenced to death, but that his life would be spared if he could give a substitute to the gallows. The price for the vicarious sacrifice has been fixed at one million florins. The authorities are invaded by numerous applicants who have formed a syndicate, for the division of the million, the victim being chosen by lots. Such is the rage for the divided million that the authorities are unable to convince the syndics of the baselessness of the rumour.

THE will of the late Sir Munguldas Nathobhoy, C.S.I., of Bombay, has been proved in London, the personalty in England being sworn at £5,288. The testator

"directs his executors to build on land belonging to him, adjoining the sanatorium on which he founded a bungalow, to be used as a dispensary, for which purpose he bequeaths to them Rs. 10,000, and for the maintenance of the dispensary Rs. 30,000, and to provide a Hindoo licentiate as medical officer Rs. 30,000. He bequeaths also for the maintenance of the sanatorium Rs. 10,000, and for a temple of Shiva adjacent thereto, and the idols in the temple, Rs. 5,000."

IT is a pleasure to read in the Times of India from its Allahabad correspondent that—

"Information of rather an interesting character comes from Arabia that a movement is taking form among a small portion of the more in-fluent Mahomedans in the North-Western Provinces to discountenance slaying of kine in sacrifice among their co-religionists everywhere. The movement owes its origin to a highly cultured Mahomedan who visited Mecca during the annual pilgrimage of Arafat, and from a benevolent desire to see one of the chief causes of antipathy between Hindoos and Mahomedans abolished. The originators of the movement are men learned in Islamic law, and their line of argument will be that though the cow is so generally selected for sacrifice, yet it is not requisite to the due and proper fulfilling of the requirements of Mahomedan ecclesiastical law, and that though camels and kine have always been so largely selected for the purpose, yet the will of the Prophet imposes no such heavy burden, either upon the poor or upon the rich."

THE following will be relief to millions:—

"Mouth-cancers and cigar-smoking have been closely associated in the public mind since General Grant's death; but a prominent American physician, in a recent conversation on the subject, said: 'The only cases of cancer of the tongue that I ever saw were of persons who never smoked. The majority of them were women, and the half-a-dozen men who were afflicted were not confirmed smokers at all.'"

"A wealthy landowner, named Birik, upbraided his wife during dinner for leading a fast life, and the pair from high words came to blows. Each then snatched a dinner-knife, and a sanguinary struggle ensued, which only ceased when both were too weak from loss of blood to continue the struggle. The wife was stabbed in many places, and shortly afterwards succumbed from her injuries, while Herr Birik was almost disembowelled, and lies in a hopeless state."

A BAPTIST Missionary, at Emden, baptised a servant girl of twenty, in March, in icy cold water taken from a tank on the roof of the church during a heavy snow-storm. The girl did not survive the baptism, and the Missionary was tried, and sentenced to one week's imprisonment.

UNDER the head of "Congress Jugglery," the Bengal Times reports—to the Director of Public Instruction in particular:—

"One Dareekanath Ganguli, an ex-pundit of Lansing Middle Vernacular School, Furidpore district, has been here for a week or so, touting for the Congress, as that wretched body of syces and flunkies out of place is called, and has contrived, we hear, to juggle a couple of thousand rupees out of weak minded Natives, by telling them a pack of lies; among others that Englishmen fear this mob of raggamuffins, and that Government favours it. We are told that several Government officers in local schools and Colleges have subscribed. If this be so, they should be dismissed, without one word of explanation asked. Government must either stamp out sedition, or be charged with pandering to it. We commend these remarks to Sir Alfred Croft."

Is this the famous Ganguli of the Brahmo Congresswals?

A CORRESPONDENT informs our contemporary that the late Zemindar of Baldah, in the Dacca District,

"Baboo Harendra Narain Roy, on his death-bed left his estate in trust to his guru—Mohesh Tagore—who was also appointed guardian of his minor son; and reversionary heir of the estate should this son, his ward, predecease him. A third party has now proceeded to have Mohesh Tagore's guardianship set aside, pleading that he is interested in his ward's death—a plea that appears to be supported by common sense."

A prominent local Zemindar is said to be at the bottom. But litigation under such circumstances is inevitable. It would be well to know what sort of a man is the spiritual guide.

CHINA is slow to receive external civilization. At any rate, she is never satisfied with adopting any unless she can herself reproduce it. Consul Alabaster, in his Report from Canton, says the manufacture of buttons—the jewellery of China—was originally introduced into Canton by foreigners, but it has almost entirely passed out of them into native hands, and last year the Cantonese were able to export over 560,000 lbs of brass buttons.

WHILE Prince George of Wales was at Canada, a question of precedence arose. Cardinal Taschereau claimed the seat next to the Prince at the state banquet. This demand was opposed by the naval and military commanders who argued that they derived their rank from the Queen, while the Cardinal held only papal rank. The Cardinal thought it due to the majesty of the church to retire from the feast altogether.

THE Russian Finance Minister is out on a journey to C Asia—to find new markets for the Russian trade.

A MYSTERIOUS but disastrous fire at Madras has completely destroyed the records of the Harbour Trust Board office. The entire building is gutted, the only thing saved being the cash safe. The fire was discovered at night about nine o'clock on the 14th. The immediately neighbouring Albert Victor Hotel narrowly escaped. Some of its windows taking fire, all the furniture was removed. In the confusion, the contents of a till amounting to Rs. 700 were missing.

THE Hon'ble Mr. George Hamnett, the first Eurasian member of the Madras Legislative Council, has inaugurated his entry into the council by a defamation prosecution of a local journal and Eurasian organ—the Madras Standard. He chose only the printer and publisher, John L. Pereira, for his return attack. An explanation, without prejudice to the defence, was offered, which was not accepted as sufficient salve for the wounded feelings. There was a call for the manuscript of the alleged defamatory matter, which the editor, Mr. Cornelius, swore was, in the usual course of business, destroyed. The prosecutor denied the statements made in the Standard. This closed the prosecution and the case stands adjourned to the 20th.

THE General municipal elections in the Presidency Division come off in December next, in the 24-Pergs., Nuddea, Jessore, Khulna, and Moorshedabad districts.

THE St. James's Gazette objects to the appointment of Sir Steuart Bayley as Secretary in the Political and Secret Department of the India Office. It is disposed to think that such transfer involves the loss of personal dignity and impairs the prestige of the higher office.

THE Salvationists have launched a crusade against smoking as if it were the Devil's Own. The General of the Army considers it injurious to health, uncleanly, a waste of money, a disagreeable indulgence for which there is no justification. He has accordingly ordered that no smoker can become or remain a sergeant, bandsman, sergeant-major, secretary, or treasurer or holder of any other office in the Army.

NOTES, LEADERETTES, AND OUR OWN NEWS.

DEFYING the protests of the Portuguese authorities, British gunboats have gone up the Zambesi. The Portuguese cabinet resents the action of the British. The new Premier, General D'Abreu, announced on the 15th, to the Chamber of Deputies that the Government was unable to recommend the adoption of the African Convention with England, except in an amended form, and unless the gunboat incident was satisfactorily explained.

THE new smokeless powder known as Cordite has been successfully experimented at Messrs. Armstrong's range at Sillloth.

LADY Rosebery being seriously ill with typhoid fever, Lord Rosebery has notified his inability to receive Mr. Gladstone during his Midlothian campaign. May God preserve the good Lady—worthy wife of a worthy husband—and enable her lord to resume his important part in the politics of the day. On the last occasion, Mr. Gladstone's memorable triumph in Midlothian was in a great measure due to Lord Rosebery's immense personal exertions and unstinted material help.

WITH bands playing and banners flying, twenty-five thousand Salvationists attended the funeral of Mrs. "General" Booth, at Olympia, in Kensington.

AT midday on the 13th, a large hat manufactory in Aldersgate was burnt down, killing six and injuring thirteen employes. A disastrous fire is also reported from Syracuse, New York. The largest hotel there is destroyed and twenty-five persons killed.

PROFESSOR James Edward Thorold Rogers of Political Economy, at Oxford, is dead. A distinct loss to Liberal politics even more than to literature.

MESSRS. O'Brien and Dillon still keep themselves undiscovered. They are believed to be hiding in the neighbourhood of Paris, having failed at Havre to catch the selected American liner.

In the meantime, great preparations are making for their reception in America, while warrants are out for their arrest, and the trial is proceeding at Tipperary.

The latest news is that Messrs. Dillon and O'Brien had been at sea in a private yacht since Thursday week, and landed at Cherbourg on the 15th whence they proceeded to Paris.

THE Grand Duke Nicholas, uncle of the Czar, is suffering from cancer. Lately, while commanding at the manœuvres in Valhynia, he went mad and most painful scenes took place. His Highness was escorted to his private estate in the steppes of the Don.

STRIKES are not yet ended in Australia. The strikers give themselves occupation by constant disturbances. Sir Henry Parkes, Premier of New South Wales, said in the Sydney Parliament that the strike was as disastrous to the Colony as a bombardment, as the country would suffer less at the hands of an enemy.

THE entente cordiale between England and Italy continues. On the 15th, the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava paid a visit to General Crispi. At this diplomatic meeting the most cordial assurances were exchanged—for whatever they might be worth. At any rate, it is a great advantage to England and the cause of peace to have such an experienced and accomplished British representative at the Italian Court.

THE Irish malcontents are getting frantic over the last check administered them by the Ministry. They are resorting to desperate methods. In revenging on the Government, they are discrediting all government itself. They have started a sensational story of Irish wrong at the hands of the unspeakable Saxon. Mr. W. O'Brien, M.P., professes to hold convincing evidence that poor John Daly, convicted in 1884 of treason and felony, was the victim of a Police conspiracy, and he has found a supporter in a Birmingham Alderman, himself a Gladstonian Liberal, Alderman Wanton. This civic notability with an ominous name asserts that the head of the Birmingham Police told him that the explosives found on Daly, on which he was convicted, were placed where they were discovered by an agent of the Police. Mr. Farndale, the Chief of the Birmingham Police in question, seems to have given Mr. Wanton some such information, of whose disclosure in this shape he was not prepared for. He throws Wanton overboard but says, what may be readily believed, that the Police in Ireland employed unscrupulous agents. That was a matter of course—a resort of necessity. What other agents could they get? Where are the scrupulous men who would be the creatures of the Police? They must be rare birds, indeed, if there be any such. If the Police were punctilious about the character of their agents, their occupation would be gone. Of course, the Police are the same everywhere. They are certainly no better in Great Britain than in Ireland. Not many years ago, the picked men of the London Police—Detective Branch—were thoroughly exposed and convicted.

THE Irish Home Rulers appealed to their English patrons to procure a reconsideration of Daly's case, but both Mr. Gladstone and Sir William Harcourt have declined to interfere. That was a most ill-judged move. Is Mr. Parnell suffering from the strain of work and anxieties? Surely, the Irish Party should not have reckoned without their host. The English chiefs of the Party should have been sounded before risking a public appeal. Now their very grievance is discredited by their best friends, what sympathy can they expect in other quarters?

IN America, too, one of their allies, Mr. Scranton, a Republican, offered in the House of Representatives a motion expressive of sympathy for the unfortunate political prisoners in the hands of the British Government, with what result we are not informed.

THE fallen Bismarck is apparently not happy in his forced retirement. He is giving out that he may make a raid on Parliament (the Reichstag) and plant himself as a permanent thorn in the side of Government.

In his deprivation of office he has not been civilly disabled, and he may show in the ensuing winter, how. Herein one may see the weakness of the European system of unlimited liberty. If the ex-Vizier carries out his threat, he will not only be a nuisance like Lord Brougham in his anecdotage, but may prove an embarrassment to the administration and a curse to the Empire his genius and energy have built up. No such thing in the East. No nonsense there! In Turkey, Bismarck would be banished for his mischievous avowal.

THEY are all dying in Germany, the nobles. One after another, four well-known cavalry officers of aristocratic regiments had lately killed themselves. And now another suicide is announced. Towards the end of September, a noted not to say notorious gentleman jockey, Baron Schleinitz, died at Berlin. Germany is only paying the cost of political ascendancy and material prosperity and materialism. This suicidal epidemic certainly bespeaks great demoralization. The first revelation came with the violent death in the Imperial family of Austria. The optimists of course regarded that incident and the cause thereof as an exceptional case. But these last successive scandals leave to apologists no room for explanation.

WITH all their up-doubted courage, Europeans dread to die with a nervousness that is simply amusing to the least warlike Asiatics. We are not surprised, therefore, to learn by the last mail that the Czarewicz fights shy of Constantinople from a vague notion that the cholera is in the air—of the Bosphorus!—in one of the beautiful palaces on the banks in which he was to be housed, unless he chose to remain on board in his own vessel. But over and above that, it is now believed that his trip will not take place at all, owing to his lady's inability to support so long an absence from him.

THERE is mourning in Bokhara at the sudden death of the heir to the throne. The feeling is stronger in St. Petersburg. He was about to visit the Russian capital where he would have entered the Corps of Pages to the Czar. The Moscow Gazette does not hesitate to trace the death to the English, who are supposed to have instigated a fanatic Mussulman to the murder, inasmuch as the Prince's visit to St. Petersburg involved the complete subjection of Bokhara to Russia. With the progress of European power in Asia, Europeans are introducing Asiatic manners into their politics.

RUSSIA has in view the cultivation of opium in the Caucasus. There is a proposition, which is being discussed, to extend the Transcaspiian Railway to Meshed.

IT has been notified under the Bengal Excise Acts that a duty of one anna per gallon will be levied, from the 15th October 1890, on beer manufactured in Bengal and sold to the public. The Lieutenant-Governor is further pleased to exempt, so far as the aboriginal tribes are concerned, home-brewed pachwai from all the provisions of the said Acts which relate to its manufacture and possession within the districts of Manbhoom, Singbhoom, and Lohardugga, and the Sub-division of Banka in the Bhagalpore district. The relief ought to be extended to the aborigines of the Eastern frontier, Garrows, Kookies, Nagas, Lushais, Chakmas, &c.

THE threatened disaster to the Kidderpore Docks has been averted,—permanently we hope. Water was let in on Sunday, the public being invited to witness the interesting process. The flooding continued till Monday. The water is now within 6 feet of coping level in Dock No. 1. No further movement of the walls is reported.

LAST Saturday, a currency note of the value of Rs. 100 was missing in the Currency Office. The whole establishment was detained till 9 at night when it was discovered by a meter among the sweepings. The Treasurer threatened all the assistants with fine, but on the wise interference of Mr. Jacob, Comptroller-General, the matter ended with a fine of only Rs. 5 on the immediate assistant in charge.

SIR Auckland Colvin is a knowing Civilian. He has hit upon a cure for the growing ill-feeling among the Hindus and Mahomedans at Allyghur. He has threatened the ringleaders with disurbarmment unless there is an immediate visible change for the better.

ON Wednesday se'ennight, there was a large gathering of friends and admirers at the Sir Cowasjee Jehanghir University Hall, Bombay, to consider a memorial to Principal Wordsworth, about to retire from India. The Chair was taken by Mr. Justice Birdwood. On the proposition of Mr. Justice Telang, a large Committee was appointed to collect subscriptions and determine the form of the testimonial. The suggestion for a public meeting was not approved, but the Committee was empowered to consider it. A subscription was immediately started, and the offer came up to Rs. 2,100, Mr. Justice Telang heading the list with Rs. 500. The Bombay Graduates' Association have requested the University to confer the Honorary Degree of Doctor of Laws on Mr. Wordsworth, "as a fitting mark of appreciation and well-merited honor, crowning his distinguished services and eminent career as an educationalist of very high attainments in this country." We trust the dons and hidalgos—for there are usually more hidalgos than dons, more representatives of wealth and power than those of humanity and science in Indian Universities—will yet see the desirability of even a constructive connection with one of the purest spirits and best educators of the Century—with the Rishi Bard who has revolutionized Letters and Art—
With him that uttered nothing base.

THE oily green little insects, which, at the close of the rains, make evening life in Bengal miserable, crowding en masse upon lights and scattering themselves about on the table and poisoning food and drink and attacking your very face, entering your eyes, nose, and ears and getting into your hair, have from last week entered appearance. There is no remedy against them. Unless you elect to live like a ghost in absolute darkness, you must put up with the nuisance. It is, however, limited in duration. That is long enough in all conscience for a nightly plague, driving us very near mad for about a month. With the Dewali—their St. Bartholomew's Day—they disappear. And no wonder. The insecticide on those nights—the Dewali Eve and the Dewali—is enormous. Herein you have a glimpse of the philosophy of Hindu holidays. But the mosquitoes are a standing grievance, thriving most about this time of the year. If the cooler hills are free, the place of mosquitoes is there taken by the aggravating and unavoidable pishu. It is some satisfaction to know that we are not singular in our distress. India is by no means the most insect-ridden land. In America, they have got a Mosquito Country. In Venezuela, Guiana, &c., you must continually use both hands to defend your person from being stung. Not to go to South or Central America, the United States, in some of their best regions, suffer dreadfully. According to the New York Times, the inhabitants of Elizabeth are the victims of a sudden raid of mosquitoes. The same paper writes:—

"The pests fairly swarm in the city and make life miserable for those who are exposed to their stings. Such an invasion so late in the season is something remarkable. The insects seem of a smaller species than usual, and ordinary mosquito netting affords little if any protection against them. Telegraph and telephone operators and clerks in the stores are the worst sufferers from the unlooked-for plague."

These new American mosquitoes seem to be more akin to pishus, nuisancially, we mean, though not zoologically.

A STORE in Atlanta, Georgia, is reported to be completely paper-made. The rafters, weather-boards, roof and flooring are of that material. It is impervious to water and is less inflammable than a wooden dwelling, and, what is more, is cool in summer and warm in winter. What of that pest of life—and literary life in particular—in the Tropics, the white-ant? We suppose the substance may be as doctored as to repel it. If such a building can resist the ravages of wind and time, into the bargain, papier-mache is nonpareil tectonic material. As it is, it seems to be a very superior one for temporary and ordinary structures. Forests are being cut down and wasted at such a rate, that it is well for the future of the human race that such a fine substitute for timber has been discovered. We hope some of it will be brought out to this country, to displace the murderous corrugated iron roofing. The introducers of that was a public enemy. In Georgia, they would have tar-and-feathered him. And most deservedly.

THE printer of Hansard has issued a publication giving statistics of parliamentary palaver during the late session. Mr. Goschen, and after him Mr. W. H. Smith, head the list. Of the Opposition, Sir W. Harcourt spoke most frequently. Of the supporters of the ministry, Sir Roper Lethbridge and Sir Robert Fowler were the most voluble and at par, having made each more than thirty speeches. Our old Indian has already made a parliamentary name. He is bound to rise still higher. Those who rail at Mr. Bradlaugh for his pestering the House with incessant catechising of the Government, ought to know that Mr. Seaton put during the past session 120 questions!

BOULANGER seems to be as great a public robber as any of the French military administrators. He is accused in a book just published at Paris with misappropriation of funds raised for public objects. Of the money subscribed by his admirers and partizans, he spent £1,000 in paying the debts of a female friend, and "conveyed" £30,000 to British territory—Jersey.

HOWEVER much Europeans may affect to regard Bakshish as a peculiar Oriental institution, we are afraid the East cannot lay claim to the monopoly. A good deal of corruption prevails in the Continent among the nations of Christendom. The disclosures in France which in 1887 drove M. Grévy from the Presidency are fresh in every mind. In the United States, offices and contracts are notoriously sold. In South America, it is worse.

THE Englishman quotes from an article significantly headed "The Argentine Filibusters," in an English magazine, what an eminent contractor in Buenos Ayres once said, namely:—

"When I want to see a Minister it costs me on an average six or seven hundred dollars. At the door I must slip two dollars into the porter's hands, or his Excellency is not likely to be in. Then I got to the Secretary's clerk, and a fifty dollar note must be dropped among his papers, or His Excellency is sure to be engaged three or four deep. That passes me on to the Secretary, whose valuable time is worth a hundred dollars a minute. He thinks he is doing me a great favour if he lets me off for five hundred dollars."

Bakshish, in fact, is the Universal Fetish.

SOME three years ago we drew the attention of the public and the Government to the zemindari oppressions which had commenced in some indigo estates in the District of Midnapore, by way of pressure on the tenants to sow indigo. In such matters our object being really to relieve the poor sufferers, we disdained to make political capital or cause a sensation. Accordingly in noticing the subject, we spared the respectable European landlords as much as we could. Without naming them, we simply indicated the locality in an unmistakable way so as to warn them and afford a clue to Government, concluding with an appeal to the latter to see to it and a warning to the former to put their house in order. Our effort was not in vain. Government quietly interfered. The tenants were told that it was a matter of choice with them to cultivate or not to cultivate indigo. As there was no agitation—no wounding of amour propre of the planters nor danger to landlordly prestige—there was no temptation to obstinacy on the part of the Zemindars, who quietly submitted to be reasonable. Things have, however, again gradually drifted to evil ways. The relations between Reis & Rayyet have relapsed to the old abnormal groove. And this naturally enough. For the indigo cultivation, as carried on in Bengal, is an unnatural business. The factories cannot be maintained with profit without sacrificing the peasantry. The indigo difficulty has again raised its head in Midnapore. The cultivators have for some time been harassed with enhancement and dispersion or impounding of their cattle grazing in the village commons, with other forms of landlordly pressure. And now a murder has occurred. On the 8th October

Holloway's Ointment and Pills.—Those who have given these remedies a fair trial freely admit that they inherently possess every property suitable for healing and removing eruptions, ulcerations, piles, abscesses, sores, bad legs, gathered breasts, and all disorders of the glandular system. When carefully rubbed in the Ointment relaxes the swollen muscles, diminishes inflammation, assuages pain, and even alleviates dangerous maladies which may have lasted for months, or even years. Holloway's excellent preparations are effective singly, resistless in combination, and have been recommended by grateful patients to be resorted to as alternatives when all other means of regaining health have failed. Their action is temperate, not violent or reducing.

the inhabitants of a village named Dhoomsirgar, Pargana Boogri (in the Garbetta Sub-Division?) killed a Tagiddar—a humble factory servant—of the name of Rai Charan Ghosh, a Goala or milkman by caste. A Sub-Inspector of Police is on the spot to enquire but no accused has been sent up. The body was despatched to Ghatal.

THE LITTLE CLOUD IN CANADA.

AN important manifesto has appeared in the shape of an article in one of the leading Canadian papers. That journal is the Quebec Telegraph. The conductors are not for playing the old game of hide and seek in a matter of prime moment. With evident reference to the recent utterances of the Dominion ministry, the editor denounces the talk of Loyalty as "twaddle." We better give the very words of the Telegraph, specially as we see the Englishman's Home Correspondent's summary telegraphed from Bombay quoting a mutilated passage. These are, as we find them in the Overland Mail of September 26, reproduced from the Standard's New York telegram of September 21:—

"We are for throwing off the mask. Political annexation is the manifest destiny of the Dominion. We are loyal to the interests of the people of Canada before the interests of the people of Great Britain. Sir John Macdonald may say what he pleases about the McKinley Bill only having the effect of directing our trade to other quarters. No doubt it will have an appreciable effect that way. No doubt, too, the Bill is a deadly blow at our trade. Trade is what we want, not twaddle about loyalty to the Crown. If those who believe in annexation only have the courage of their convictions and speak out, as we do, they will hasten to welcome the day when we can call ourselves citizens of the mighty Republic. May it be soon."

The italics are ours, to mark the part omitted in the extract in the Englishman. The omission is, of course, due to telegraphic economy, but on such a question the sentences kept out are not without a peculiar significance. The New York Correspondent of the Standard, in quoting from the Canadian journal says, (according to the Overland Mail.) that the Quebec Telegraph is a supporter of the Premier, Sir J. Macdonald. If this be true, then the present head of the administration in the Dominion would seem to have lost touch with his followers, resulting in a great split—perhaps a serious landslide—in the Party. This is not so certain, however. If others are to be believed, the journal in question is no organ of the present Canadian ministry. The Standard's New York telegram could not well pass unchallenged, and Mr. T. Burstall has written to the same London paper to discount the force of the Quebec editor's deliverance. He says:—

"The Quebec Telegraph is opposed in the strongest sense of the word to the present Government at Ottawa, and no paper in the Dominion is less likely to support any of Sir John's proposals. The expressions used in the paragraph you quote show how wide must be the distance between him and the writer of them. Referring to what is said about 'loyalty to the Crown,' allow me to add that loyalty to the Crown and to the British connection is shown in Canada on every possible occasion, and I think a paper in the position of the Standard should not give to the world statements casting a slur on the Premier of Canada, and on so many British subjects, without having satisfied itself of the reliability of the source from which the statements emanate."

The drift of it all is that the utterance has no political value, proceeding as it does from a well-known malcontent in the Opposition press. We confess to be unconvinced by Mr. Burstall. The New York correspondent may, from his distance, have made a mistake (though it is most unlikely) about the party antecedents of a leading Canadian paper. But nothing can detract from the meaning or the force of the utterance itself. The pronouncement is there, and it stands by itself, without need of the slightest extraneous help. It is independent of Party or position of the declaring person. Be he who he might, such a declaration made by any body, in any part of the British Empire, would be sure to tell. It is a bold avowal even in Canada. In India, in these latter days of needless alarm and unstatesmanlike suspicion, or in Ireland at this moment of bitterness, the avower might swing in the air or be given a new country for it. It is nonetheless treason at Quebec. Such words are not lightly uttered. They are the more remarkable for the exuberance of loyalty to which Mr. Burstall himself refers as uniformly characterising every public or private ceremony in the Dominion. Will the ministry in England take any notice of the seditious preaching of the Quebec journal? Between Ireland and the state of the Continent and the attitude of Russia, their hands are full enough. Questions may, still, be asked in Parliament. It certainly behoves the guardians of the Empire to stop, if possible, the spread of anti-British feeling and views in the British Possessions in North America, till it is considered expedient to wash hands off them.

This is no individual utterance that we are noticing, but clearly a party—at the lowest, a clique—emanation. In fact, this article is the Republican counterblast to the Chief Minister's late speech at Halifax. This bold attitude of the Republicans in Canada has, doubtless, been precipitated by the asseverations of loyalty by Sir John Macdonald.

The existence of a pretty strong desire in certain quarters in the Dominion to coalesce with the great American Union, is well known, and English statesmen have always taken their measures in full view of it. We, for our part, were inclined to doubt the loyalty of the French part of the population, but we were assured to the contrary on the highest authority—that of men who have lived in the Dominion and have been connected with the administration. From their accounts, the French in Canada would seem to be a very different people from the French at home. They are a staid, sober lot, lively indeed, but averse from change. Though proud of their race and still maintaining their manners, faith, and tongue in tact, the descendants of the defenders of Quebec under Montcalm evidently appreciate their advantages under British rule, and are thoroughly reconciled to it.

POLICE REFORM.

THE Local Governments are bestirring themselves in the cause of police reform. Provincial Committees are being constituted for enquiring into the causes of the failure of the Police and suggesting remedies. It is perhaps as well that the subject should be dealt with piecemeal and in a tentative manner rather than by an unwieldy Imperial Commission, making its royal progress over the continent to find, in the end, that its recommendations were far too elaborate for the financial condition of the Government and too general for the peculiarities of the provinces and districts. We have already had experience enough of the issue of these mountains in labor, nor are we altogether sanguine as to results from these modest Provincial Committees and more than from Commissions. The Chowkidari Police is now universally condemned, but who gave it the constitution which is now found so faulty? Was it not a big pretentious Commission of Enquiry that travelled and made great noise and examined witnesses and wrote reams of foolscap? The constabulary force also is the outcome of enquiries and deliberation equally elaborate. They have both failed on trial, and now there is to be another series of enquiries to examine the causes of failure and to provide against them in the future. It is something that the failure about which unofficial testimony had been unanimous long ago, is at last recognised by the officers of Government. On this point, opinion amongst officials themselves is no longer divided, although both the Governments of the North-Western Provinces and of Bengal are unwilling to admit that the defects of the police are wholly due to the system itself. In accounting for the inefficiency of the police, Sir Auckland Colvin has written a philosophical disquisition on the subject which we read with great interest. He is strongly of opinion that the police only reflects in its character the character of the people and that no mere increase in the pay of the rank and file of the force will effect much improvement in that character, until there was an improvement in the morale of the people at large. Sir Steuart Bayley offers now a similar explanation, and holds the absence of public spirit in the community at large mainly responsible for the failure of the police. He says:—

"In reflecting upon the causes of the comparative failure of the Police in Bengal, it is necessary not to lose sight of the obstacles which the Police, as well as the Magistracy, have to surmount. Foremost among our difficulties is the character of the general mass of the population from which the Police are drawn. The Police are of, and from, the people; and as are the people so are the Police. To speak broadly, the people have but a faintly developed sense of public morality, of the far-reaching duties of the individual towards the public at large; they view without reprobation the giving and taking of bribes; they will not interest themselves, in matters outside their immediate personal concerns, to oppose oppression or blackmail or false evidence or other offences against the public. The Police, therefore, have not the sharp incentive of public opinion to keep them up to the mark, and the discipline to which they are subjected is not sufficient to raise their standard of public morality in any marked way above that of the class to which they belong. Mr Macpherson describes the state of public feeling in this connection as follows:—'In Bengal' (he writes) 'it is, I believe, much more difficult than in England to bring offenders to justice, because we have not here so high a standard of truth and so general sympathy with public justice. The public spirit which in England will prompt strangers and disinterested persons to give evidence for the Crown and for the defence, with no object but that truth may be established, is not often found in this country. The mass of the people have not the intelligence and sturdiness of character which should make them denounce the oppression of a neighbour by a zemindar, or refuse to pay blackmail to the cattle thief, or be ashamed to protect the house-breaker and receiver of stolen goods by professed ignorance of his guilt. Aggrieved persons and witnesses are often reluctant to go to the authorities, because the authorities are dilatory, troublesome and inefficient, and this cause and result act and re-act on one another. The only remedy for this want of public spirit is to spread education among the masses.' Another difficulty which Mr. Macpherson points out arises from the frequent connection of crime with complicated questions of title to, and possession in, land and of tenancy and rent. Other difficulties arise out of climate; houses are left open and property unprotected, while the raiis supply facilities for burglary which amount almost to temptation."

We think this explanation involves an injustice to the people. The popular sentiment towards crime and criminals is one of as keen repugnance as elsewhere. There is the same indignation felt at the miscarriage of justice through the inefficiency or corruption of the police. The police also would receive effectual support from general society in the discharge of their duty, but it is they who resent the interference of the public as an intrusion and an impertinence. Nay, they ally themselves with the worst and most notorious characters of a place who act as their purveyors, till things have come to such a pass that no honest man would have anything to do with the police. The police themselves make the business of an honest informant or ally too hot for every body. The object of a police investigation being not to get at the truth but gain to themselves, there is no room for honest people in the business. The penalty of their intervention is endless trouble and worry and humiliation to themselves, and having paid this penalty over and over again, it should be no wonder if they procure peace to themselves by subordinating public duty to their own interests.

The Government of Bengal is at issue with the Government of India as to the direction a reform of the present system should take. The Governor-General in Council is of opinion that the reform should begin at the higher grades by improving the position of Inspectors, while the Bengal Government adheres to its view that it is the lower grades that more urgently call for improvement. Sir Steuart Bayley says :—

"Very great importance must be attached to the improvement of the investigating officers. It is universally admitted that their present pay and prospects are insufficient to attract trustworthy and competent men. In the lower grades especially, it is plain that such a man can barely live on his pay; while, even in the higher, the pay is but an inadequate remuneration for the high qualities and great responsibilities which are required of an officer in charge of a station. Neither the names nor the scale of pay suggested by the Government of India are to be taken as final, and it will be open to the Committee to make their own proposals. As at present advised, the Lieutenant-Governor is not inclined to think it altogether immaterial whether an officer employed in investigation is called a Head-constable or a Sub-Inspector. The higher title does in practice, he believes, connote a higher standard. He would also invite the Committee to consider whether the scale of pay provides for sufficiently even and frequent promotion, or whether the increments proposed are not too large and sudden. Due regard is to be paid to financial considerations, but the Lieutenant-Governor would observe that the scheme to be submitted to the Government of India is one which is expected to 'place the Police of Bengal upon a satisfactory basis as regards pay and promotion.' He is, therefore, prepared to accept recommendations involving a moderate increase in expenditure.

The amelioration of the position of Inspectors is, perhaps, not so urgent as that of the lower grades, but it nevertheless demands the careful consideration of the Committee. A suggestion has been made that deserving Inspectors may be rewarded by being appointed Deputy Magistrates and Collectors. Independently of the fact that an additional difficulty would thus be introduced into the recruitment of the Subordinate Executive Service, it is, perhaps, open to question whether this measure is desirable in itself. The experiment, so far as it has been tried in Bengal, has not, it is believed, been attended with success, and several of the officers consulted object to it and think that it would be preferable to give higher promotion in the Police Service itself; doubtless the whole matter will receive due attention from the Committee."

We are in perfect accord with the Bengal Government on this point. Corruption largely prevails among the rank and file, and any improvement in their pay and prospects can only be effective if it bore some reasonable proportion to the importance and responsibility of their duties. Sir Steuart Bayley seems to view favorably a suggestion, which has been made, that there should be a sharp line of demarcation between Head-Constables and Sub-Inspectors, the appointments of the latter being made direct from candidates of education and respectability. This would probably necessitate the creation of a small grade of probationers. The idea is a good one, and if it could be carried out, it would enhance the chances of a real reform in the entire system. Sir Steuart has no sympathy with the outcry against the Native Magistracy. Without experience, the native Deputy Magistrate may commit errors sometimes leading to weaken the judicial administration, but this is due to defect in the preliminary training for the service rather than to any constitutional obliquity or any thing equally serious. The remarks of Government on this point have great practical interest :—

"The Lieutenant-Governor is by no means disposed to sympathize with the sweeping denunciations of the Native Magistracy which he sometimes sees. He believes that the Magistrates are very often industrious and well-meaning men, but they receive very little education of a kind specially adapted to fit them for their duties on the Bench. A Munsif will have had the advantage of watching the procedure of the Courts for some years, and thus of learning by experience, not the mere letter of the law only, but the method in which the discretionary powers allowed by the law are exercised in practice. The Deputy Magistrate has no such advantage. Often the first case which he has seen tried is the first which he has tried himself; at any rate it may be so. Again, the legal practitioners who appear before the Deputy Magistrate are of an inferior class in respect of their knowledge, both technical and general, and far from affording him the assistance which a Munsif gets from a well-educated bar, they do more harm than good in influencing the general conduct of cases. To counteract these influences, Sir Steuart Bayley is sure that what is required is the kindly but firm and frequent interposition of the superior officers."

THE DOORGA POOJA IN THE COUNTRY.

SIR,—The celebration of this great national Festival in some of the great Brahman Houses in the remote country towns, is a proper subject of careful study to all students of sociology and religion. I may, therefore, be permitted to jot down here, for the delectation of your readers, both European and Native, what I saw, in my youthful days, in my native District of Nuddea.

POOJAH IN THE KRISHNAGHUR RAJBARI.

The celebration of the worship of Mother Doorga in this ancient aristocratic Brahman family has no parallel anywhere in India, so far as its religious rigidity, solemnity and grandeur are concerned. The place of worship erected by the Maharaja Krishna Chandra Roy Bahadur, about a hundred and fifty years ago, for the special accommodation and service of the great goddess, is a grand and noble edifice, covering an area of nearly 40 bighas of land. The Poojah Hall with the spacious verandahs on three sides of the vast quadrangle could easily accommodate 10,000 Brahmans dining together. I can not give you the exact measure of this Hall, but I think, I am approximately correct when I say, that it is bigger than the Town Hall of Calcutta, from one end to the other. Its height is more than 40ft. from floor to ceiling. It is a square building having open verandahs on three sides only. In the front of this Hall, there is an equally large Hall which has been lately roofed by the present Maharaja Khetish Chunder Roy Bahadur, at the cost of Rs. 30,000. In this Hall, sacrifices are offered to the goddess on all Poojah days. The statue is made in the course of some months, by special artist-potters, who are in the enjoyment of jagir lands from the family. In the country, no respectable house would purchase the statue from the store of the potter. It is a great degradation to do so, almost an act of impiety, certainly a sign of inferior status. On an auspicious day, the family holds the inauguration ceremony of making the figure of divinity, with due solemnity and the religious observances proper on the occasion. The Krishnaghur Raj Pratima—the pedestalled group of the goddess and her surroundings—is of a majestic appearance, and in every way worthy of the grand Hall in which it is installed. To give you an idea of the size of the Pratima, it is enough, I think, to say, that on the Immersion Day, it has to be carried to the river side by the aid of more than 60 bearers and even so many find their task one of great difficulty. The earthen representation of divinity has one noticeable peculiarity. Krishnaghur, you know, is celebrated for its tinsel work of the finest kind, but the statues of the Krishnaghur Raj Pratima are not adorned with it. The dress and jewellery of the goddess and companion deities are all the handiwork of the potter, being of clay beautifully painted with all sorts of bright colours to look like robes and gems put on. The worship (Pooja) is performed by the highest Brahman Pandits of Navadwip who are, every year, invited to attend the ceremony. It was in 1868, I believe, that the Hon'ble Justice J. Budd Phear went to Krishnaghur during the Doorga Pooja, and observed and enquired into the ritual and ceremonies performed, according to the strict injunctions of the Sashtras. He was so much struck by the enthusiasm and religious fervour that pervaded the whole, that he told the late lamented Maharajah Satish Chunder Roy Bahadur, that he had never seen such an impressive ceremony anywhere in Christendom, nor in any other part of the world.

THE IMMERSION CEREMONY.

This ceremony is unique of its kind. Its solemnity and grandeur are such that even a sceptical mind cannot see the great spectacle without being deeply moved. I have an anecdote to relate in connection with this ceremony. One day, some years ago, the present Maharajah Khetish Chunder Roy Bahadur was found ailing, and the family doctors in attendance advised the Dewan, the late Baboo Kartikaya Chunder Roy, not to send the minor young Maharajah bare-footed and bare-headed, to accompany the Pratima, in procession to the river, on the Bijya day. The adoptive mother, the late lamented Maharane Bhubaneswari Devi, on hearing this, got offended with those who had advised the Dewan to adopt this most reprehensible course, and ordered her servants to dress up the boy with the usual Garua or saffron-coloured robes, and take him on the walk of a mile to the river side with the Pratima. She cried with tears, exclaiming, What good to adopt? what have I taken another's child for and made him my own, if he is not to perform the duties of a son and of his station, of the representative of this Hindu Raj? Shall the immersion ceremony of my Goddess be performed in the absence of my son? Had my husband been living now, no one would have dared to counsel this highly irreligious and foolish course. The Raj servants hastened to obey her orders, and the fever-stricken boy Maharajah attended upon the Goddess in her march to the river as usual in the customary garb. The immersion or rather drowning takes place in the river Jellinghee,—a distance of nearly a mile from the Rajbari, immediately after sunset, when the Raja bathes in the stream, and comes back to his palace in his Shukha Shun chair carried by eight bearers. There is another interesting feature in this ceremony. When the remains of the Goddess are at last deposited in the river from a boat, a bird of blue feather is set free in the air. On the following day, the eleventh of the moon, the Pandits of Navadwip, as well as the Brahmans of the Town of Krishnaghur and its Suburbs are sumptuously fed with fried bread and-sweetmeats (looches and shondesh). This feast is called the Ichya Bhojan or Banquet of desire. Perhaps, formerly the Nuddea Rajahs used to feed the Brahmans with eatables according to their likes, and hence this designation.

Then as regards the pranami system, it is nowhere in vogue in the mofussil, except in your city of Palaces presided over by your Peer-Ali and Sbonarbanias. I saw Maharajah Satish Chunder Roy Bahadur coming to the house of my maternal uncles, the well-known Barendra Chowdhry family of Krishnaghur, on the Eighth Day of the Poojah. The Maharajas do not go to any other Brahman's house, however exalted his position may be, unless he is one of his own relations. When the Maharaja used to come to my uncles' house, the head of the Chowdhry family held one rupee in his hands, and the Maharaja took it up and placed it before the Goddess and bowed down to the ground before her. The people in general abhor the idea of taking money from others on this auspicious occasion, under any pretext whatsoever. Even the poorest worshippers of Mother Doorga in the country will not do it. It is extremely derogatory to do so. The pranami system of Calcutta is looked upon with deep contempt by all the inhabitants of the mofussil.

One more anecdote in this connection, and I have done. It was in the year 1880, I went to Oola, (or Birnugger) in my native district of Nuddea, to collect subscriptions on behalf of the late lamented Mr. Robert Knight who was then prosecuted in the London Police court by the Amir-i-Kabir of Hyderabad. I saw the late Babu Annoda Prosad Mookerjee, brother of the well-known Brahman Zemindar, the late Baboo Bamun Das Mookerjee, Baboo Annoda Prosad received me with open arms, and in the course of conversation, told me that during the life-time of his brother, the Pooja used to be celebrated at an annual cost of nearly Rs. 20,000. For four months previous to the Pooja, large quantities of rice, dal, sugar and various other things used to be stored for the purpose. All the inhabitants, Hindus and Mahomedans alike, of the neighbouring villages numbering about 40 or 50, would come to enjoy the Poojah in the Mookerjees' house; and on an average, 10,000 people were daily fed on the Poojah days. In your much vaunted City of Palaces is there any the least approach to such a ceremony in the houses of your millionaires? Let the honest admirers (if such there be) of the big Baboos, Rajas, and Maharajahs answer. Above all, let those who have received favours come in gratitude forward to support the credit of Calcutta and its wealth.

THE DOORGA POOJA HOLIDAYS.

"Reis & Rayyet" Office,

1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane, Wellington Street,

Calcutta, October 3, 1890.

To---The Private Secretary to the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal.

SIR,—I have the honor, by request, to forward for submission to His Honor the accompanying Memorial with the annexures to His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General from seven thousand British citizens, subjects of Her Majesty living or having business in and around Calcutta, praying for a reconsideration of the recent orders on the subject of the Hindu Holidays, and to request that it may be forwarded to His Excellency the Viceroy with His Honor's generous recommendations or such remarks as may seem called for.

The Memorial, it will be observed, is signed by the representatives of the educated, propertied, mercantile, professional and respectable serving classes in the Town. Most of the high caste Hindu families of the metropolis, such as the Boses of Bagbazar, the Mitters of Nundon Bagan, the Rajas of Sova Bazar, the Duttas of Hatkhola and Nimtolla, the Mitters of Durjeeppara, the Mitters of Simla, the Ghoses of Pathooriaghata, the Singhees and Ghoses of Jorasanko, the Duttas of Chorebagan, the Bysacks of Barabazar, the Mullicks of Pataldangah, the Boses of Bowbazar, the Duttas of Wellington Square, the Deys of Entally, the Rajas of Kidderpore, the Mitters of Bhowanipore, the President, the Secretary and the leading members of the Bengal National Chamber of Commerce, the British Indian Association and the Indian Association, all the Merchants and Bankers of Hatkhola, Neemtolla and Darmahatta, many of the Hindu Attorneys and Pleaders of the High Court, the Hindu part generally of the bars of the Calcutta Police Courts, of the Sealdah and Alipore Courts. Besides, thousands of the classes more immediately concerned have joined in this representation, which is headed by Raja Rajendralala Mitra L.L.D., C.I.E., Maharajah Narendra Krishna Br., K. C. I. E., Raja Rajendra Narain Deb Bahadur, Baboo Jadu Lal Mullick, Kumar Satyabadi Ghosal, Kumar Dabendra Mullick, Baboos Surendra Nath Banerjee, Joygobind Law, Nundo Lal Bose, Bollai Chand Singh, Narendranath Sen, Sishir Kumar Ghose, and N. N. Ghose, Kumars Nil Krishna and Benoy Krishna, Baboo Jogesh Chunder Dutt, and others.

The Memorial is supported by two important annexures in Bengal, one being a copy of the Opinion given to the Baranagar Ratepayers' Association by the eminent Pandit, Mahamahopadhyaya Rákhál Dás Nyáratna, of Bhátpará, and another a copy of the Opinion of the most celebrated Pandits of the Metropolitan Division, Professors of the Sanskrit Colleges of Nuddea and other University (Sanskrit) towns, including such as have been honored with the title of Mahamahopadhyaya. The originals may be supplied when called for.

In view of the approaching Doorga Pooja Festival, it is to be hoped the Government will, in kindness for Her Majesty's numerous Hindu subjects of Bengal, issue the necessary orders in time. It would have been desirable if this representation could have been made earlier. But the last Government order on which it is founded appeared only in the middle of July, and as it was sometime before they became generally known and discussed, it was impossible, in a country like this, to expedite business involving reference to all the great Professors of the Hindu religious lore in the country more rapidly than the Memorialists have completed their representation.

To save time, a copy of the Memorial, without the signatures but with the annexures, is sent to the Private Secretary to the Viceroy and Governor-General for submission to His Excellency.

To---Colonel J. C. Ardagh, C. B.,

Private Secretary to the Viceroy and Governor-General of India.

SIR,—I have to-day had the honor to forward, by request, through the Private Secretary to the Hon'ble the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, to His Honor for submission, with his Honor's remarks, a memorial to His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India in Council, from seven thousand Hindu subjects of Her Gracious Majesty the Empress, praying for a reconsideration of the question of Hindu Holidays, with a view to the reversal of the orders last passed and published in the middle of July of this year.

It would have been highly desirable if the memorialists could have approached His Excellency earlier. But the orders of the Government appeared only in the middle of July last, and as it was sometime before they became generally known and discussed, it was impossible, in a country like this, to expedite business involving reference to all the great Professors of the Hindu religious lore in the country more rapidly than the memorialists have completed their representation.

To save time, specially with reference to the hopes of the vast Hindu population of Bengal in regard to the great National Festival of the Doorga Pooja at hand, I have, by similar request of my fellow memorialists, the honor to send herewith a copy of the memorial, without all the signatures but with the documentary annexures, and to request that you will be so good to lay it before His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council. An additional copy of the memorial and of the other documents are enclosed.

When the memorial comes to Simla, it will be seen to be largely signed by representatives of the propertied, the mercantile, the trading, the professional and other intelligent classes, by most of the principal Hindu families in town and suburb, such as the Rajas of Sovabazar, the Boses of Bagbazar, the Mitters of Nundon Bagan, the Duttas of Hatkhola, the Mitters of Simla and of Durjeeppara, the Ghoses of Pathuriaghata, the Mullicks, Singhees and Ghoses of Jorasanko, the Duttas of Chorebagan, the Bysacks of Burabazar, the Mullicks and Boses of Pataldanga, the Boses of Bowbazar, the Duttas of Wellington Square, the Deys of Entally, the Rajas of Kidderpore, the Mitters of Bhowanipore, by the Presidents and the leading members of the British Indian Association, of the Indian Association and of the National Chamber of Commerce, by all the Merchants and Bankers of Nimtollah, Hatkhola and Darmahatta, by many of the Hindu Vakils and Attorneys of the High Court, by the Hindu part generally of the Bars of the Calcutta Police Court, the Small Cause Court and the Courts of Sealdah and Alipore, besides thousands of the classes more immediately concerned. The signatories to this representation are headed by Raja Rajendra lala Mitra, L.L.D., C.I.E., Raja Rajendra Narain Deb Bahadur, Maharaja Narendra Krishna, K. C. I. E., Kumar Debendra Mullick, Babus Jadu Lall Mullick, Narendra Nath Sen, Surendra Nath Banerjee, Sishir Kumar Ghosh, and N. N. Ghosh, Kumar Nil Krishna Bahadur, Babu Nanda Lall Basu, Babu Jogesh Chunder Dutt, and others.

Attention is respectfully solicited to the Bengalee annexures, which, in Hindu opinion, are of the utmost weight and may possibly be considered by Government conclusive on the theological side of the controversy at least, one being a copy of the Opinion given by the eminent Pandit Mahamahopadhyaya Rakhal Das Nyaratna, of Bhatpara, and another a copy of the Opinion obtained by the memorialists of the most celebrated Pandits of the Metropolitan Division, Professors of the Sanskrit Colleges of Nuddea and other University towns, including such as have been honored with the title of Mahamahopadhyaya. The originals may be supplied when called for.

Viceroy and Governor-General in Council.

The Humble Memorial of the under-mentioned
Hindu inhabitants of Calcutta and its Suburbs,

MOST RESPECTFULLY SHEWETH :

That Your Memorialists have been much distressed and alarmed at the recent decision of Your Excellency's Government in the matter of the curtailment of the Hindu Holidays as proposed by His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, although such a proposal clashes with His Honor's decided opinion on the subject as expressed in his replies to the representations of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce made in 1888 and 1889 and formed in accordance with the well known views of the Government of India entertained in 1880 and 1882, viz., "that the inconvenience and loss which the mercantile community suffer from the existing state of things, great and serious as they are, cannot be remedied without inflicting a still more serious hardship on a far more numerous, though less influential portion of the community."

That the proposed announcement of the holidays, in future, under two notifications, viz., the first issued under Sec. 25 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, dealing with those Hindu holidays only the observance of which is absolutely required by Government employes, &c. to fulfil their religious duties, and the second, issued as an executive order including the remaining days hitherto observed as public holidays, but which are considered as days of social observance only, is, in the opinion of your Memorialists, nothing more than the virtual reduction of the number of holidays heretofore allowed under the Act; for an executive order is simply an optional matter and may or may not be passed according to the will and pleasure of the officers authorized to do so for the time being. That such a result is not unlikely is proved by the fact that only last year about this time the late Comptroller-General Mr. Gay, possibly to please the Chamber of Commerce, of his own motion, passed an order that the Currency Office should be kept open during the last Doorga Poojah holidays, although the holidays were advertised under the Act; this order would most surely have been carried out if fortunately the Supreme Government, happening to have a timely intimation, had not interfered in the matter and thereby prevented a gross injustice being done to the helpless Hindu employes in the office: as a further proof of the inadequacy of an executive order it may be urged that the number of days, as casual and privilege leave for each year provided for the non-gazetted employes in Government Offices, is granted or not according to the pleasure of the heads of Offices. Not to speak of the hardship entailed upon the large number of Hindu assistants in all the private offices, having no casual or privilege leave by the non-inclusion of the holidays in the Act.

That the curtailment of the holidays in the way indicated above, appears to your Memorialists, not to have been determined upon, as will be proved hereafter, after a careful and thorough investigation as it should have been, the evidence upon which it is founded not being such, as no reasonable exception could be taken to it.

That His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor, with all his laudable desire not to hurt the religious susceptibilities of the people placed under his rule and for which he has their best thanks, has been led to initiate a measure that cannot fail to produce the most disastrous consequences, and that, at the instance of an infinitesimal portion of the community, viz., the Christian merchants of this city who are not even unanimous in their opinion on the point, as will be shewn further on, for some inappreciable advantage to themselves.

That for finally settling the question by the inclusion of the Hindu Holidays generally and the Doorga Poojah Holidays in particular in the notification under the Negotiable Instruments Act passed in 1881, with a view to safeguard these holidays against any future attacks upon them, these having become of too frequent occurrence in the past, the Government has been deservedly regarded with feelings of the deepest gratitude by your Memorialists. As soon however as the Government notification was published on the 11th December 1889, in the Gazette, under which the holidays, declared under the Negotiable Instruments Act, would remain the same in 1890, as they had been in previous years, a deputation of the Chamber of Commerce waited upon the Lieutenant-Governor and recommended the splitting of these holidays so highly valued by your Memorialists as stated above, and this time, being armed with the opinion of Pandit Mahesh Chunder Nyaratna, they got His Honor to accede to their request and to make the proposal for splitting the holidays in question which has now been accepted by Your Excellency's Government with the concession of adding the Visarjan day to the three so-called strictly religious days to be published under the Act, on the strength of the recommendation of the Pandit.

That upon general principles it would perhaps be always unjust and impolitic for any Government to make a searching analysis of national holidays into those which are wholly set apart for religious services and devotions, those which are secular, and those which might consist partly of solemn observances and partly of times for festivities and social gatherings, with the view of attaching no importance or a secondary importance to such portions of the holidays as are non-religious and disallowing them to office employes as any occasion may require; much less would it be incumbent upon and within the sphere of a Christian Government to undertake this task in respect of the complicated question of Hindu Holidays when it is a difficult task to discover which acts of a Hindu including even the performance of the daily functions of life, are non-religious. It is also a patent fact that the rites of hospitality and feasts as manifestations of religious fervour and enthusiasm are intimately connected with religion and have become sacred in the eyes of the people. Like the Israelites your Memorialists are not only allowed but enjoined to rejoice before the Lord. In all countries, a very long continued salutary secular custom often overrides, in importance and popularity, a strictly enjoined religious ceremony, and no Government, therefore, without seriously hurting national feelings, can exclude from its holidays the days for the observance of the former, on the ground of its being non-religious.

That assuming that the Government in its wisdom has thought itself justified to make the analysis for the above purpose, on the strength of the opinion of the said Pandit, it would be of the first importance to examine whether this opinion is correct. At the outset, it should be observed that the said Pandit is not a Smarta or one versed in the Dharma Sastras, and is therefore not regarded by the orthodox Hindus as an authority in matters relating to religious observances and domestic duties, and though he says he consulted some Pandits of the Calcutta Sanskrit College of which he is the Principal, they could not but support his views, if they supported him at all, for obvious reasons.

That the Pandit has appended to his first letter to the Chamber of Commerce, dated the 4th November, 1889, a table of Hindu holidays in Bengal, for the year 1890; and, in the body of it as well as in the column of remarks of the table, has made certain statements most of which are vague and admit of various constructions; and if any particular interpretation of them has led the Bengal Government to divide these holidays into those the observance of which is absolutely required, that is, which are days of religious obligation, and others which are days of social observances only, your Excellency's Memorialists venture to say that, according to the experience of the oldest among them and according to the opinions appended of the eminent Pandits they have consulted, a grave mistake has been committed. Such a division, from a strictly Hindu point of view, is utterly impossible. The Pandit in his definition of Hindu holidays may have had this in view, but he has allowed himself for escape by referring to them as mostly festivals connected with religion. His classification of days with worship and no worship, though he says he has not included the latter class in his table, is quite misleading, worship, in the peculiar sense in which a Hindu understands it, never being dissociated from any festival. His drawing of distinctions between festivities and ceremonies, with religious (or Sastry) sanction and without it, would tend to introduce an element in the discussion productive of interminable disputed questions. There are certain popular customs believed as very sacred or religiously obligatory in their observance which cannot now be traced to any Sastry injunctions, while many of them, with the most solemn sanctions, have either fallen into desuetude, or have been entirely forgotten. Government in its wisdom has always, in practical matters, recognized prevailing Hindu customs as they are, without trying to enquire into their origin, and has respected them when they have been found to be salutary or generally innocuous. The Pandit has also laboured to indicate days of festivity, as commencing with days of worship, or preceding, or following them, or not being adjuncts to them. Such indications tend to convey wrong ideas of the character of Hindu holidays, worship and hospitality being as inseparable from these days as the warp and woof of a texture, perfectly inseparable from each other without destroying the fabric; there is, also, no worship, ceremony, or fast, of which festivity is not a necessary accompaniment. With regard to the minor holidays, the remarks of the Pandit in the said table, are equally wrong and misleading. The worship of Saraswati, for instance, is general among the Hindus, and the lowest castes form no exception to the rule, as asserted by the Pandit, even the public women and other outcastes celebrating it with great éclat. The Shivaratri-fast, likewise, is not confined, as the Pandit asserts, to only a few. A large majority among all classes of Hindus, men and women, young and old, observe it and keep the vigil with great devotion. Respecting the Dole Jatra, only two days for worship have been mentioned, but it has other such days also; the Pandit has taken the noisy and saturnalian way of its celebration by the Hindustances of a certain class as the test of its greatest popularity among that class only, but it is well known that, in every Bengali Hindu household, some emblem of Vishnu is daily worshipped, and for it, there must be a Dole Jatra which is celebrated with more or less outward demonstration according to family customs, on different dates. The Pandit should have remembered that an orthodox Hindu in Bengal is popularly described as one who performs or attends to the Dole and Doorgotsava, such performances being the sine qua non of his orthodoxy. The Annapoornapoojab, like most single day Poojahs, has now become very popular with all castes, it being included in Vratas to be performed for at least four years successively, but the Pandit says it is like the Vasanti observed by a few people. The Chaitra Sankranti is not only observed by orthodox Hindus of good caste but by all castes. To call the two Ratba Jattras as not important is certainly most unjustifiable, as every Hindu will admit. The Mabalaya is not observed by orthodox Hindus of good caste only, as asserted by the Pandit, but by all castes, including the very lowest. It is therefore called the Moochi-Amavasya or the day on which even the shoemakers make offerings to the manes of their ancestors. The Lakshmi-poojab, performed in hopes of promoting material prosperity, instead of being a moderately popular festival, is a most popular one, it having a distinct connection with all the stages of agricultural work.

That the Pandit's second letter to the Chamber of Commerce of the 14th November, 1889, deals specially with the Doorga Poojah Holidays. Here he mentions that the celebration of the Doorga Poojah, this year, 1890, commences, really, on the 20th and continues to the 22nd October, and on the 23rd there is to be the Visarjan ceremony, i.e., the parting ceremony with the Devi. He seems to think that the 19th or the Shasthi Bodhan and Amantrana day is not an important one, first, because the Poojah takes place that day at dusk, secondly, because the ceremony on that day, with respect to non-Brahmans, always, and with respect to Brahmans, generally, is performed by priests or Poorobits, and thirdly, because the regular Poojah with festivities commences on the next day. Certain expressions used in this connection together with the many omissions and partial statements made, cannot but create wrong impressions on the minds of foreigners, regarding the nature of these holidays. The Pandit is clearly wrong when he says the Poojah, in 1890, will really commence on the 19th October. If by "really" he means according to the strict injunctions of the Sastras, that day is the 7th October or the 9th day of the waning moon of the season, and not the 19th October. Many very religious or very respectable and well-to-do people actually begin the Poojah in Calcutta and the Mofussil on the said lunation, making the festival of more than a fortnight's duration; others accept the next best day for the commencement of the Poojah, viz., the Protipad or the first day of the following waxing moon (14th October, 1890); and others again initiate the Poojah on the Sasthi or the 6th day of the same waxing moon (the 19th October, 1890). This Sasthi is not only one of the most important days for those who commence the Poojah on that day, but also for those who do so on the two other preceding dates, for, besides being the Bodhan day with many people, it is the Adhivasa or initial image-worshipping day for all. It is a gross mistake, also, to regard the image-worshipping days (the 20th to the 22nd October, 1890) as the only strictly Poojah days. The Poojah performed before the emblematic Ghata and Altar, popularly called the Bodhan Poojah, on one or other of the three initiatory dates and continued day after day down to the Visarjan day, characterises these days as much strictly Poojah days as the said three days when the Goddess is worshipped. In fact, the Ghata Poojah is the Poojah. Nor can any weight whatever be attached to Poorabit assistance at the Poojah. It is quite incomprehensible why the Pandit makes a prominent mention of it with reference to the Bodhan or Poojah initiation day and the Visarjan day only. As a matter of fact, as already observed, not only every part of the Doorga Poojah, from the Bodhan to the Visarjan, must, with respect to non-Brahmans generally and to many Brahmans not given to religious studies, be performed by family priests, but every other Poojah must be so performed; and if this Poorabit assistance and the fact of the Shasthi-Bodhan ceremony being performed at dusk had any significance, real or imaginary, in relation to the question at issue, no Hindu householder would, on the ground of religion, regard it a hardship to work at any public office on any of the Poojah days whatever, or at least at certain hours of those days. Surely, the Pandit could never have contemplated that such a conclusion, natural as it is, should be drawn from his writings. The real fact of the matter is, that even when a family priest performs the actual Poojah and other rites for his Yajamana or client, the latter has to undergo certain formalities and to perform certain portions of this ceremony, which, for all practical purposes, obliterates all distinctions between performance of Poojahs with and without Poorabit assistance, not to mention the ten thousand other matters which must occupy the time of all the people of the household, during the Poojah.

That the Pandit also, premising that among the people the festivities attending the Poojahs are matters of greater interest than the Poojahs (strictly religious worship) themselves, attaches some importance to the Visarjan day when there are much outward demonstrations and social re-unions. From this point of view only, the Government of India, finding the Bengal Government to have excluded this day from the number of days to be strictly observed as holidays, directed the addition of it (23rd October, 1890) to the three days in the first notification recommended by the latter. As a matter of fact, however, the real importance of the Visarjan day arises, not, as alleged, from its being the day for show and pomp but from its being the concluding day of a most valued ceremony and worship, both in the morning and evening. The Pandit's adoption of a shifting standard for estimating the importance of holidays leads him to grave errors. Judging of the Kali Poojah from the above point of view, he attaches an importance to the Visarjan day of the Poojah, and not to the actual day of the Poojah, simply because the Goddess is worshipped at night, and goes to the length of recommending, that if one day be allowed as holiday on this occasion, it should be the Visarjan day only, forgetting not only that great preparations, necessary for the nocturnal worship, have to be made by the householder, but also, the fast he has to observe, and, above all, the important Sbrad ceremony he has to perform during the day, which is of the same character as that performed on the Mabalaya day.

That, according to the strict injunctions of the Sastras, the Doorga Poojah commences in 1890, as previously stated, on the 9th day of the waning moon (7th October, 1890,) with the Bodhan Protista, the recitation of the Chundi, Veda, Poornas, &c., and the giving of presents to Brahmans. This Bodhan Poojah continues to the 10th day of the waxing moon (23rd October, 1890) or the Visarjan day. From 24th October to the following full-moon or the Kojagar Poornima (27th and 28th October, 1890) when the Lakshmi Poojah takes place, are days for the observance of variously assigned religious, domestic, and social duties to be discharged as the sequela of the Poojah. Thus it will be seen that the real Doorga Poojah holidays should be twenty two days this year, instead of twelve days as now granted.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

THE HOOGLY.

BY THE LATE CHARLES JAMES MULLER.

'Tis midnight—the Hooghly sparkles in the beam
Of the enlustrous moon. With tranquil ease
The river rolleth on, calm as the dream
Of early life. So gentle is the breeze,
There's scarce a ripple on the glassy stream,
And scarce a murmur in the leafy trees :
The scene is robed in beauty's peerless light ;
The azure sky is cloudless, clear, and bright.

And now no sound disturbs the stilly air,
Save the incessant shrill and tingling cry
Of things which court the night, and shun the glare
Of sunny day. The dusky cricket's high
And piercing chirp, with which he woos his fair ;
The green grasshopper's changeless note ; the sigh
Of the inconstant mind, as it doth wake
The forest leaves, alone the silence break.

The ponderous ships lie wrapt in calm profound ;
The weary seaman, tired with the day,
Hath sought his welcome cot, and not a sound
Now rings upon the deck ; the drunken fray,
The boisterous laugh, have ceased, and all around
Is bland and calm ; even the splashing spray,
That froths against the sleepy vessel's side,
Is scarcely heard, so gentle is the tide.

The populous city is silent now :
The din of trade is over for a while ;
The agitated mind, and feverish brow,
Are calmed in slumber ; while hope's sunny smile
Deceives the thrifty trader, whose rich prow,
Returning, haply from some distant isle,
Right richly laden, occupies his thought,
And clothes itself in dreams, which come to naught.

5.

Yon massy battlements ! how stern they frown
Upon the smiling river and green shore !
They call to mind the undecayed renown
Of former days ; when, 'mid the battle's roar,
The hero, Clive, undaunted stood,—the crown
Of empire, the stake. The rapt soul doth soar
To themes of glory, and the brilliant Past
Flashes across the mind, while Thought stands aghast.

Who can revert to that heroic time,
When a few fearless adventurers sought
Fortune and fame in India's sickly clime,
And with a never-fading courage fought
'Gainst eastern tyranny and eastern crime,
And glorious conquest over millions wrought,
And no amazement feel, at the bold deed,
Which made a mighty nation sink and bleed ?

7.

It is a tale which, when time shall have flung
O'er it, the misty cloud of many years,
Folks will scarce believe ; when bards shall have sung
The wild romantic deeds, the hopes, the fears,
Which feature it, and those strange things which sprung
Into birth, engendering both joy and tears ;
Men will look upon it as the wild dream
Of some romancer—not history's theme.

NEWS AND OUR COMMENTS.

THE Agricultural Conference at Simla has closed. The last question taken up was the utilization of village records for timely information of agricultural distress.

MANCHESTER is irresistible. The Government of India could not but give way to it. It has been obliged to appoint a Factory Commission, but, as is usual with our Government, it has blundered in the composition. Men with no experience in the subject and men too experienced but quite unknown have been put on it. The Commission commenced its work at Bombay. Several witnesses were examined and many unexpected visits paid to the mills. The Commission is due at Calcutta on Monday next. The date for the report has been fixed for not later than the 13th November.

THE principal steamer companies in India—the P. and O. and British India—have made a permanent contribution to the Lady Dufferin Fund, in the shape of 25 and 20 per cent. reduced rates of travelling for ladies to and from India in connection with the Fund.

THE Nepal Rajguru, Loke Raj Pundit, is dead.

THE Forest Officers of the rank of 3rd grade Conservator and under, serving in Burma, have been permitted to draw a local allowance of Rs. 100 a month.

DR. Hawthorne who, as a public teacher, has been before the public in several capacities, was recently sentenced to a fine of Rs. 500 for disregard of the press law, in connection with his last venture, the Beacon at Mussoorie, but failing to pay the same has been sent to prison and the press attached. What a pity so accomplished a scholar has not one friend in Anglo India to help him with this sum !

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

THIS is the recipe for hiccough of Dr. M. Anna, Physician to the Rama Varma Dispensary, Madras, which is said to have been tried with success in thirty cases. "Close both ears with the ends of the index-fingers with a moderate pressure. At the same time, drink a small quantity of some liquid, no matter what, in repeated portions, the liquid being held to your mouth by a second person in a cup or glass. The hiccough will then instantly stop."

FOR special convenience of the mercantile community, an experiment for six weeks was tried under orders of Lord Dufferin, to run a special train from Calcutta to catch the Bombay mail the next day the mail left Calcutta. It did not pay however, and the convenience was withdrawn. Another concession is now under consideration—that of running a special train from Bombay to Calcutta, on every occasion the overland mail misses the ordinary train.

A VISITOR to St. Nectaire, Puy-De-Dome, in South France, writes:—

"I have just been the witness of a curious scene at a fair not far from here. A woman was kneeling on the ground near a stall, uncoifed, with her hair falling down her back. Then a man with a great pair of scissors took the waving tresses in his hand and sheared them off close to the head, leaving only a lock at each temple. The deed was done in a few seconds, and the effect was simply horrible. It seemed to me that an abominable assault had been committed; but the woman who had lost her hair was evidently not of the same mind, for she rose from the ground gaily, covered her bare scalp with her cap, and after a feigned struggle, received a kiss from the shearer, who declared, with an ugly grin, that the embrace was needed to make the hair grow again. No money was paid, but the woman who was sheared was allowed to choose 12 yds. of some cheap dress material from the stall. Another young woman was only offered 6 yds. of stuff for her hair, which she had carefully combed out before the bystanders, but she refused to part with it for less than 7 yds. and the dealer being equally obstinate she at length tied it up with a string, put on her cap, and trudged away towards her mountain home. This practice of hair dealing in districts where life is too hard for the married woman to preserve an ornament that nature has given her, when it can be exchanged for something useful, explains the ease with which the society lady obtains her borrowed plumes. But what a difference between the price originally paid to the grower and that paid by the eventual wearer!"

Horrid! This is a double-barrelled barbarity, which the refinement of the times ought not to tolerate for a day. Yet it is far less objectionable to tempt a girl to deformity than to massacre birds for their plumes to bolster up attractions which are usually better left without such burdens.

THE Hon'ble Syed Ameer Hossein has at last washed his hands off the lawyerly Jain defamation case. He closed the case with the close of the prosecution and would not allow the defence to examine witnesses. There was an application to the High Court against the refusal of the Magistrate. Mr. Palit argued that, under the present Criminal Procedure Code, a Magistrate is bound to complete the enquiry into cases triable by a higher Court, that is, to take "all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution or in behalf of the accused" (Sec. 208), to enable him, under the next section 209, to find whether the accused is to be sent up for trial, or tried by himself, or discharged. It is only when these requirements of the law have been followed, when all the evidence has been taken, that the Magistrate is competent, under Sec. 210, to frame the charge. True, Sec. 347 directs that if it appears to the Magistrate at any stage of the proceedings that the case is one which ought to be tried by the High Court, he shall stop further proceedings, and commit the case. But the Magistrate did not act under that section. The Vacation Judges were not, however, prepared to continue the scandal of a protracted waste of money and public time, and held that the magistrate had rightly held that Sec. 208 is controlled by Sec. 347 and there was no reason to suppose that he had not exercised his discretion properly. The case stands committed to the Sessions to be held after the vacation.

A FRENCH merchant named Flippo drew a bill for £778. It was accepted by Meyer & Co. Ltd., merchants in London, who, intending to destroy its negotiability, struck out the words "or order" in the body of the bill and over their acceptance introduced the words "In favour of G. Flippo only." Flippo endorsed the bill to Decroise, Verly & Co., bankers at Lille, in France. Messrs. Decroise sued Messrs. Meyer on the bill. The defendants contended that the bill was not negotiable and, if not, the acceptance was void. The Divisional Court allowed the defence and decided against the plaintiffs. The matter was taken up to the Court of Appeal, where the Master of the Rolls, Lord Justice

Lindley and Lord Justice Bowen held differently and reversed the order of the lower court, saying that, under the Bills of Exchange Act, the bill was payable to order, notwithstanding the fact that the words "or order" had been struck out, and that the negotiability of the instrument was not limited by the words "In favour of G. Flippo only."

That, however, is not the law in India. It allows the right to restrict the negotiation of a bill. Thus, the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, lays down "The indorsement of a negotiable instrument followed by delivery transfers to the indorsee the property therein with the right of further negotiation; but the indorsement may, by express words, restrict or exclude such right, or may merely constitute the indorsee an agent to indorse the instrument, or to receive its contents for the indorser, or for some other specified person."

THE Overland Mail notices some extraordinary statements in "The Statistical Abstract relating to British India," lately presented to both Houses of Parliament. This document appears under the imprimatur of, under the India Office, one of its clerks glorying in the famous name of Horace Walpole and in the designation of an Assistant Under-Secretary. The personal appellation is a striking misnomer. This Horace Walpole, whatever may be his other literary pretensions, clearly does not share the prince of delightful tell tales' historical and topographical conscience, any more than his passion for details. A Swedish Chancellor once noticed the paucity of wisdom required for ruling the world. We have here at least evidence of how little knowledge India is governed from England with. This India House return enlightens Parliament with, among other information of equal interest, the news that Chittagong is a division in the Punjab, comprising the districts of Peshawur, Hazara, and Kohat. According, however, (adds the Overland Mail) to the maps and gazetteers, Peshawur is on the north-west frontier, Chittagong on the north-east, the interval between the Pathans of the Peshawur border and the Lushais of the Chittagong hills being very considerable. Nor is this all. We quote again: "From the same table we learn that Hissar is a division and Sirsa a district under the administration of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab. As a matter of fact, both the division of Hissar and the district of Sirsa were abolished some years ago, as may be seen from the tables published in the Punjab Administration Report. If the baboos in the Lahore Secretariat can make the necessary alterations in their tabular returns, surely the well-paid officials at Whitehall could take the same trouble, even if it be admitted that it is too much to expect them to be acquainted with the geography of India."

THE latest aerial project is to do the North Pole in a balloon of lined silk, 99 feet in diameter and 500,000 cubic feet in volume. This craze is fathered on M. Besançon, Director of the High School of Aerial Navigation, France, and M. Gustava Hermite, nephew of the President of the Academie des Sciences.

The journey is to begin at Spitzbergen and is expected, the wind favouring, to last four or five days. The balloon is to be specially varnished and filled with pure hydrogen, the car being suited for Arctic travel. All that is easy enough, specially to Frenchmen than whom there are no better hands at polishing and varnishing. Neither is the hydrogen nor the calculation a great matter to them, both chemistry and mathematics being almost French sciences. But then these Laputan savants have reckoned without their host. The wind is the chief factor in the business, and the whole rests on the Cautian pretension to command the atmospheric waves. The Columbus of the air will doubtless wait at Spitzbergen and not launch on the vast sea above for that undiscovered country from whose bourne no traveller returns, till the wind is favourable—that is blows due South. But granting such wind, and that it carries the intrepid navigator to his destination, what guarantee is there that when he has "done" the Pole, the wind will, like a good boy, blow due North and bring him back home? Half a dozen other grave difficulties might be suggested, but they have doubtless been provided against, as far as practicable, by the Director of the French School of Aerial Navigation. For the rest, he may elect to face them or take his chance. The mission is avowedly one of grave difficulty and peril. But the wind!—the wind! there's the rub! Here the chances of a favourable issue are infinitesimal. The end is one almost of dead certainty. When the wind blows to the North Pole the presumption is that it will continue so to blow for some time—certainly days—before it blow to the South Pole.

Speaking from ordinary meteorological experience, there has not been so determined a candidate for certain martyrdom than this duet of Monsieurs since he who, to be deemed

A god, leaped boldly into Ætna flames.

NOTES, LEADERETTES, AND OUR OWN NEWS.

AFTER this appearance, there will be no issue of Reis & Rayyet for a fortnight. Our next—No. 448—will be dated the 15th November 1890.

WE find that the Bengal Agricultural Department has made successful experiments in regard to a kind of fodder-grass, called Sorghum, which is not only cheap but highly nutritive to milch cows. The produce was sold at 2 annas 6 pies per maund to a Calcutta dairy, the manager of which, Mr. G. C. Bose, a Cirencester scholar, reports very favorably on it. The yield of milk of a number of cows increased from 20 to 25 seers by the substitution of this grass for straw, while the cost of fodder was at the same time reduced. The cultivation itself is also profitable, a net profit of Rs. 12-13-3 per bigha having been realised in an experimental farm. This must be cheering news to families now pressed by the high cost of maintaining cattle.

The appeals in the Warburton prosecution against the Tribune for defamation have not been filed yet. There need not be any haste in the matter. The best possible advice ought to be obtained before going up to a higher tribunal. Considering the state of official and European feeling in the Punjab, the maximum of impression might be required to secure the minimum of concession. The case of the proprietor is particularly hard. The judgment of Mr. Kennedy invites discussions which may well be set at rest by the highest Court in the land. The Magistrate finds that the Sirdar "did entrust the management to the editor; that he has not interfered with the management; and that the prosecution has failed to show that Sirdar Dyal Singh knew or intended or had reason to believe that the defamatory matter would be published in his paper." He is therefore found not guilty of publishing the libels. The Magistrate, however, finds him guilty of selling or abetting the sale of publications containing the libels. He argues that as proprietor of the press, "Sirdar Dyal Singh had full authority over the Tribune office, and the persons employed there..... It is attempted to be shewn that he had delegated the authority to the editor by agreement. The evidence as to the alleged agreement is very weak but it is not necessary that I should go into the evidence, for even if the agreement existed, it would not be held to extend to the sale of defamatory matter, for such an agreement would be void (Sec. 24 Act 9 of 1872 and illustration)." This is a strange refinement of judicature. In the same strain the judgment proceeds. The Magistrate finds the Sirdar guilty of illegal omission, and finds fault with him for not, after the manner of the Times,—when "by the rascality of a printer in 1881, a report of a speech by Sir William Harcourt appeared containing a most obscene word which he had never used"—suppressing the issues and explaining or apologising to the person injured. We can answer with our life for it that such an idea of a newspaper proprietor's duty never entered into the head of any human being out of the Punjab Commission. In awarding punishment, Mr. Kennedy is guided by the position and means of the accused. He says:—

"I take into account that no imputations of a personal nature were formulated against Mr. Warburton until Mr. Buchanan's letter was received: that the Editor has given up the name of the writer of the letter, and that he has submitted an apology for and I believe sincerely regrets the charges of a personal nature. Both of the accused are men of position, upon whom a sentence of imprisonment would tell severely, and, looking at all the circumstances of the case, I do not think a sentence of imprisonment is called for. The fine imposed must, however, be deterrent and in proportion to the means of the accused. Sitala Kant Chatterjee is sentenced to a fine of Rs. 1,000; and Sirdar Dyal Singh to a fine of Rs. 2,500. Each accused in default of payment will suffer six months' simple imprisonment."

The judgment thus fixes the guilt of publication on the editor:—

"It is shown, in evidence, that the final proofs of the Tribune are passed by him, and that he gives the order to print. The word "publish" appears to be used in the Indian Penal Code in the somewhat restricted sense of causing to be made public, and does not include, as it apparently does in English law, the sale of matter containing defamatory statements which in India is punishable under a different Section; but, even in this restricted sense, I think the Editor, in passing the final proofs and giving the order to print, must be held to have caused to be made public the defamatory statements. On the facts, then, I find that Sitala Kant Chatterjee did commit the offence of defamation punishable under Section 500, I. P. C., with which he is charged."

The law, as the magistrate points out, makes a distinction between publication and sale, both being offences under the Penal Code though under different sections. But the word "publish" is not made to include abetment of publication, and unless there was anything to shew that the editor published the defamatory articles, he could not be punished for defamation. He might have given the order for printing of the articles, but unless he published them, the Code does not make him guilty.

Mr. Kennedy defines the word "caste" used in the definition of "defamation" as "social position." Few men we fancy will agree with him.

TWO respectable Kayastha Baboos were charged before Baboo Kally Nath Mitter, Honorary Presidency Magistrate, with having kicked and struck with a shoe a servant girl in a Brahman's household. They pleaded not guilty, but the charge being proved, the accused were fined Rs. 5 each. A clearly inadequate punishment. Indeed, the magistrate took a very lenient view of the matter, if he remarked only, as reported, that "even if the complainant was any way to blame, they had no right to take the law into their own hands." That is speaking like a mere lawyer. We wish our magistrates to show that they are men also. Above all, we expect this of our honorary magistrates. The unpaid magistracy functions in the constitution somewhat like the Jury. They may be deficient in law or procedure, but they are expected to represent the best feeling of the nation. This is a function of the highest importance. Thus the bench becomes the bulwark of society—the conservator of the virtues of the community. Baboo Mitter has failed in this case. Taking the law into one's hand is not so very bad an offence as raising the hand against poor weak woman. We wish the magistrate had told the accused how all men of spirit must hold the cowardice of two men attacking a woman. The shoe is a good weapon, we grant, but it is only a savage that uses it against a woman.

WE are grieved to record the death of Rai Bahadar Bipin Behary Dutt, Government Pleader at Midnapore. Never having cared for his health, he had not had the best of it, and recently he took seriously ill. The local doctors failing, he was removed to this city. Here, for the first time, under the examination of the leading physicians, the serious nature of the case was revealed. But the discovery of pleurisy was made too late. The exhausted patient had left not sufficient stamina to struggle with the formidable disease and the heroic treatment of European Medicine. The removal from Midnapore at this uncomfortable, not to say nasty, season was probably not without its depressing effect. He survived it only a single day. The showers of Monday se'nnight "finished" him. At Beadon Street, on the 13th instant, he died in the arms of his bereaved parent. The deceased was the son of Baboo Govind Chunder Dutt, a Kayastha of the well-known old village of Boichi, on the E. I. Railway, in Hooghly. He was the architect of his own fortune. Of fortune indeed he has left little, we suspect. For, inheriting nothing beyond his Kayastha intelligence, he also inherited the Kayastha open hand, spending as he earned. We observed him in his youth of obscurity when he was prosecuting his legal studies under the protection of the once opulent Singhs of Bhastara, at whose residence in our neighbourhood in Calcutta he lived. Obtaining his law degree, he removed to Midnapore to practise. We never saw him again, but we did not lose sight of him, hearing frequently of him from his friends and our friends, and conceiving a good opinion of him. He impressed us from the beginning with his cleverness and spirit, and even frankness, though his early connection with a Zemindari house was not favourable to the last quality. And so soon as he had money he was liberal to a fault. These qualities at once brought him forward in spite of his distaste for fuss. Made Government Pleader in his District, he became still more favorably known to the officials, and soon after was made a Rai Bahadar. Successful in his profession, he lived not for himself alone. He remembered his kith and kin and friends, and his country. We offer our condolences to the sorrowing family and specially to the aged father. The old man is really to be pitied, left to maintain without sufficient means the dignity perhaps prematurely thrust upon his son.

THERE is mourning in the theatrical circles in Paris. French Comedy has sustained a great loss in the death of Madame Jeanne Samary-Lagarde, who expired in September last of typhoid fever caught at Trouville.

Niece of Madeline and Augustine Brohan, she entered, in 1874, when only 14 years old, the Conservatoire, in the class of Bressant. Three years after, she carried off the first prize in comedy, by playing a part which her aunt Augustine Brohan had created in Oscar on the Mari qui trompe sa femme. This gave her introduction to the Comedie-Française, where she made her first appearance in Petite Pluie in the rôle of a provincial waiting woman. This was a distinguished success, and she maintained this speciality to the last. She was far and away the most superb waiting woman in the comic stage. She soon made her entry in the Moliere-House where, four years after, she was unanimously made a partner. During the six years that she played the different characters assigned her in the Classic Repertoire, she is said to have made several important creations in l'Etincelle, le Monde où l'on s'ennuie, Daniel Rochat, la Femme de Socrate, Le Roi s'amuse, &c.

"I believe," says M. Jules Lemaitre, "that I have never witnessed such shedding of tears as at the interment of Madame Jeanne Samary, and never were tears more justly shed. The death of this charming young woman and the circumstances of that death, made all hearts sad. A youth so budding forth, a heart so right and good, a talent so brilliant and pure, a glory so rising, all blasted by one of those strokes so cruel and brutal, which make us feel the profound misery of the condition of man."

Yes, so right and good—so pure! For Jeanne Samary was no actress of the old evil type. Never, we are told, were such brilliant histrionic talents harmonized so beautifully with the virtues of a private life. A devoted wife and an affectionate mother, her death left a husband almost frantic with grief and the little daughters—whom she adored—inconsolable for her loss.

NATIVE States and Principalities are no doubt improving under the supervision of the Supreme Government. But the improvements are not always for the best, at any rate not good for the national government. They are usually blind imitations. It is, therefore, satisfactory to find that in Hyderabad, the native ministers are not always hoodwinked followers of our Government. In 1282 Hijri, the wise Sir Salar Jung I., having in view the condition of the Nizam's Dominions, ruled that the houses of judgment-debtors should, as far as possible, be spared in executing a decree. This order was not fully carried out, and property of every description, including dwelling houses, was attached and sold. It was, therefore, in Hijri 1295, directed that, as it was necessary to protect the dwelling houses in the Nizam's Dominions, sanction of Government should be taken before attaching them. This order was communicated to the High Court in the form that "in future no dwelling house belonging to a judgment-debtor (except such as had been previously hypothecated under some agreement) should be attached in execution of a decree without the sanction of the Government." In two years, the High Court complained of this order as being harsh on the decree-holders and detrimental to the interests of trade and the judicial revenue, and recommended the entire cancellation thereof. A Commission, composed of some of the principal Secretaries of Government and Maharajas and other respectable persons of the dominion, was thereupon appointed to consider all the orders on the subject. They reported, and the Minister has now issued the following rules:—

1. If, previous to the introduction of these rules, the dwelling house of a debtor is mortgaged on account of a debt, for the satisfaction of which application is made for the sale of the house, the Court which executed the decree shall have the same power with respect to the sale of the house as it has with regard to any other immoveable property. But mortgages effected after the passing of these rules shall not debar their working.

2. On application being made for the attachment of the dwelling house of a judgment-debtor, the Court thus applied to shall, after issuing an injunction, attach the house in the usual manner, and there will be no necessity for the sanction of the Government.

3. Except in the case of houses mortgaged previous to the introduction of these rules (as mentioned in Rule 1), the dwelling houses of judgment-debtors shall not be attached or sold in execution of decrees, except in the following cases:—

(a) When the judgment-debtor, while the decree is in process of execution, consents in writing to the attachment of his dwelling house.

(b) When there is prima facie evidence that the judgment-debtor has been found guilty of dishonesty, fraud or high-handedness in the matter for which a decree has been obtained, or while the suit was pending, or during the execution of the decree.

(c) When the Court has reason to believe that a debtor, in order to prevent the execution of a decree, has concealed his moveable property, or has removed beyond the jurisdiction of the Court, or has in any way interposed difficulties in the execution of the decree.

(d) When the refusal of the Court to attach the property is likely to impose greater hardship on the decree-holder than on the judgment-debtor.

(e) When the dwelling house of a judgment-debtor is more than sufficient for his necessities and a part of it can apparently be sold without depreciation of the property. If, however, a portion of a house cannot be sold without loss to the judgment-debtor, notwithstanding that the accommodation is more than sufficient for his requirements, then the entire house shall be sold, a sum sufficient to buy a cheaper dwelling house, suitable to his requirements, being given to the judgment-debtor from the proceeds, provided that he does not already own a suitable house in the same town. This sum, which should in no case exceed half the price realized by the sale, shall be fixed at the time the warrant for executing the decree is issued. The sum thus reserved to the judgment-debtor shall not be liable to attachment by any decree or order, except on a claim of inheritance.

(f) When the Court has any special reason, or sees urgent necessity, for the attachment of the house.

4. The dwelling house of a judgment-debtor shall not be sold in execution of a decree or order for the recovery of money until

(a) The Subedar, if the house is situated in the Districts, has granted a warrant of execution.

NOTE 1.—The Subedar shall have this power in all cases referred to in exceptions (a) to (e) to para 3; but in the cases mentioned in (f) he shall submit his opinion to the Government through the Judicial Branch of the Home Department.

NOTE 2.—In the Western Division, where there are separate Civil Courts, warrants for the execution of decrees shall be submitted by the Court to the Subedar through the Sadar Adalat.

(b) The sanction of the Government is obtained if the house is situated in the City or the Suburbs, or until the Government has confirmed the decree forwarded from the District Courts under exception (f) para 3.

(c) Judgment has been delivered in any appeal which may have been preferred against the decree, or the expiration of the time within which an appeal can be preferred. The Court granting the decree shall not apply for such sanction unless the above conditions have been fulfilled.

5. Every department through which such applications are submitted for sanction, may reject the same, recording the reasons for doing so, and informing the Court that passed the decree accordingly.

6. If, in the execution of a decree which could have been satisfied only by sale of the house, the sale of such house or of part thereof is avoided, then the person and other property of the judgment-debtors should be held liable for the satisfaction of this decree, notwithstanding that such person or property was not intended to be affected by the decree.

7. The possession of a dwelling house by a judgment-debtor shall not be held to nullify his non-liability to imprisonment on the ground of poverty.

8. The power which a Court has of temporarily attaching the profits of any property in order to prevent its being sold shall also extend to those cases in which a dwelling house may be sold under these rules.

9. From the date on which the attachment of a house is finally decided upon the judgment-debtor shall be allowed two months' time to vacate the house; but the grace thus allowed shall not debar him from receiving the sum to which he may be entitled under Rule 3 exception (e).

10. The concessions herein made to judgment-debtors shall hold good in those cases even in which the Government is decree-holder."

The subject is worthy of consideration by other native states as well as by our own Government. In a poor country like India, it is absolutely necessary that the houses of both the reis and the rayyet should be protected, not only against foreign aggression or internal depredation, but the people must know and feel that they have a home! That itself will lend an additional stability to the rule of Empress Victoria. We once more commend the subject to the attention of Government and the Law Member as also to our public bodies.

Holloway's Pills.—Liver, Lungs, and Kidneys.—Most diseases of these depurative organs arise from obstructions, over the removal of which these celebrated Pills exercise the most perfect control. A course of them is strongly recommended as a remedy for such chronic affections as liver enlargements, congestion of the lungs, torpidity of the kidneys, and other functional disorders which cause much present suffering, and if neglected lay the foundation of organic diseases. Holloway's Pills are specially adapted for the young and delicate; their gentle and purifying action ranks them above all other medicines. In indigestion, nervous affections, gout, and rheumatism these Pills have achieved for themselves universal fame. They expel all impurities from the blood, and thus restore cheerfulness and vigour.

THE VALUE OF ADMINISTRATIVE REFORM INQUIRIES.

ALL honor to Mr. Westmacott for his excise reforms, and to Sir Steuart Bayley's Government too, for its selection of a loyal officer. It was a happy idea to relieve the Revenue Board of direct administration of the excise department and to place it under a practically independent officer as Commissioner of Excise. Indeed, were it not for this measure, no reform worth the name would have been possible. The fact must now be patent to everybody that the Board have so far managed, somehow or other, to leave the Excise Commission's recommendations a dead letter. Nay, they went further, and acted in entire violation of them. The gist of that Commission's finding was that the outstill system must give place to the central distillery in all tracts, except the most sparsely inhabited ones for which alone it was recommended under strict limitations as to the capacity of the stills, the number of shops, the minimum price of the liquor, and other details. This was the chief conclusion to which the Commission came after lengthened enquiries into the subject. And will it be believed that, before the ink of their report was dry, the proscribed outstill system began to invade even the urban districts round the metropolis? And yet it is the bare fact. Such is the fate of Commissions. Not lightly do we rail, with a persistence which is already nauseating to ourselves, against the reality and usefulness of these costly and elaborate agencies of enquiry. Our experience of a good many years has not enhanced our confidence in them. As make-believes they are excellent. For silencing public agitation for the time being—as a device for not doing a thing or indefinitely putting off the doing, they are perfect. As for real business, they are simply not meant for it, and it should be no wonder they leave things pretty much as they were. Against the foregone views or settled policy of the ultimate arbiters of our destinies, they are wholly powerless. They indeed do some literary good, we freely admit. Their reports are most valuable addition to our especial and general knowledge of the particular subjects, but, beyond this, in a great majority of cases at any rate, they are not good for much else.

We have been led too far in our condemnation to stop without some illustrations. To make our meaning clear, we shall cite a few. So many crowd upon our view that the difficulty is where to begin. Let us at haphazard give the place of honor to Lord Dufferin's Finance Commission. Upon no subject had the public voice been, for a long series of years, more unanimous and persistent than in a demand for the reduction of the Government expenditure. The cry for economy had gone forth from organs of public opinion as from one voice, but in vain. It was scouted as an impertinence, and even as an interference with vested interests. The cause of administrative economy thus had little chance of acceptance with the authorities, until the authorities themselves, for their own reasons, were forced to look into it. The enormous expenses of the frontier defences and other military preparations had to be provided for at all costs, and after all possible fiscal resources had been exhausted, the Government of Lord Dufferin found that there was nothing left but to retrench the prevailing scale of expenditure. A Finance Commission was accordingly appointed and invested with full powers of enquiring into all departments of the State expenditure, not excluding that which is incurred at Home. In justice to a ruler who was cruelly misunderstood, we must say that the motives were highly honourable. The Finance Commission was Lord Dufferin's pet; he set great store by it—expected the grandest results from it. His utterances and proceedings in that connection left no doubt of his earnestness or his solicitude to secure a substantial relief to the country's burdens. And what was the result? All his ado went almost for nothing. The moment the Committee set about their work, they were told by the Secretary of State that the Home Charges must remain beyond the purview of their enquiries. This was a sufficiently serious restriction to make the Commission next to useless. Everybody knew that it was the Home Charges that admitted of the largest reduction, and if they must remain untouched, the Commission might as well be abandoned. But even with this limitation, the Commissioners sat down to work only to find themselves thwarted and opposed at every step. The very nature of their duties required constant references and correspondence with Heads of Departments, for, unless furnished with information by these, they could do nothing. And it not unoften happened that their letters asking for information received little or no attention. The greatest difficulties were in dealing with the Military Offices and Departments. Nothing daunted, however, they went on, and at last brought their work to an end. But the real end of the business was yet as far off as ever. From the completion of their report, there was a strong official combination to resist the economies recommended by them, and what now had to be done was to submit their recommendations over again for the consideration and approval of the offices and departments affected by them. The result of a further series of enquiries in the hands of interested persons can easily be imagined, and it is not surprising that the real effects upon our finances of this Commission's labours are out of all proportion to the high hopes which were raised in the public mind by its appointment.

Nor does the Public Service Commission offer a less disappointing spectacle. We have already shown how, between one Secretary of State and another, the fundamental basis of this Commission has been ingeniously shifted. The Government of India strenuously insisted upon further Parliamentary legislation as the chief object of the Commission, or to have no Commission at all. After prolonged correspondence extending over two Viceroyalties, Lord Kimberley was brought to accept this condition. The Commission was accordingly constituted by Lord Dufferin, and when everything was ready, Lord Cross said there was no necessity for recourse to legislation, all that was needed being provided by executive order. Now, this is a procedure certainly not calculated to promote confidence in the intentions of our ruling authorities or the utility of these pretentious Commissions of Enquiry. They do some good no doubt, but far too little for the hopes they raise or the waste of money and energy they entail.

We might multiply examples, but it is hardly necessary. We shall close our remarks with one more illustration. The Education Commission appointed by Lord Ripon has submitted voluminous reports long ago. These reports have, in the usual way, been again reported upon by Local Governments and Administrations, and the recommendations of the Commission have been generally accepted. But can anybody say that we are at all the better in regard to the education of our children for all the turmoil of all this tedious process? One of the most original and certainly most important recommendations of this Commission, was a scheme, namely, of the bifurcation of studies after a certain stage of progress in secondary education, propounded with the object of providing two parallel courses of education, one literary and the other practical. The adoption of this idea was recommended on the ground of its supplying a modern side to the too exclusively literary character of our educational system, and thus removing the reproach of doing nothing for technical education. This was a good idea, but the question is, What progress has been made in giving effect to it?

THE DESTRUCTION OF THE OUTSTILL.

MR. Westmacott has justified his appointment. He has succeeded. Unfortunately, the success is of a kind which is measured by a diminution of revenue. Aye, there's the rub! there's the respect why Governments and officials have so long fought shy of the reform—and fight shy still! At any rate, indications are not wanting to show that they are far from reconciled to the new policy forced upon them by a Parliamentary Resolution. Indeed, it is not difficult to see that were it not for the persistent crusade led by Mr. Caine and his Parliamentary friends against the outstill system, it would have held its ground to this day.

There has been a marked and steady loss of revenue and, what is more important, a decrease in the consumption of outstill liquor. Upon the 1st April 1889, outstills were abolished throughout the whole of the district of the 24-Pergunnahs as well as in Howrah and the Serampore sub-division of Hooghly. The revenue from country spirits throughout the whole of the metropolitan tract affected, including Calcutta, fell, in round members, from 14 to 13 lacs, and the consumption from 275,842 to 228,928 gallons. The progress of the reform in the following year was more satisfactory. Outstills have been abolished in 1890 throughout the whole of the Burdwan, Presidency, Dacca and Orissa Divisions. This has been mainly due to Mr. Westmacott's loyalty to the new policy, and the Lieutenant-Governor freely acknowledges his services in this respect. There has naturally been a more marked falling-off in revenue and consumption than in the year 1889. Another important measure which has been adopted in the outstill tract, with a view to reduce consumption, was to raise the price of outstill liquor in order to equalise the duty on it with that of distillery liquor. This has resulted in a serious decrease of revenue in the Patna Division. It is unfortunate that both the reforms were introduced in a year of scarcity, so that it is not possible to ascertain clearly how much of the effects of the reforms is due to the changes in excise policy and how much to the prevailing high prices.

The decrease in revenue is greatly exercising the Board, and the question as to the extent to which the reforms should be given effect to is still far from decided. The following extract from the last Government Resolution will show this:—

"Both the Board and Mr. Westmacott are of opinion that in certain parts of Western Bengal where these reforms have been introduced, the facilities for obtaining a cheap illicit supply of liquor are so great that it would have been advisable to retain outstills at least for the present, and in the same connection the Board record the significant observation that they 'trust that the measures already adopted for re-introducing the central distillery system may be regarded as an experiment which requires watching before it is extended'. Upon this question the Lieutenant-Governor can say little more than emphatically repeat what he has already declared on more than one occasion, that 'it must be distinctly understood by the Excise Commissioner, and by all officers concerned with the administration of excise in Bengal that the policy which has received the approval of the Secretary of State and of Government is that the outstill system should be replaced by a central distillery system wherever circumstances render it expedient; and speaking generally the only circumstances which render the change inexpedient are sparse population, difficulties of supervision, proximity to alien territory, and a liquor which will bear neither transportation nor keeping.' This enunciation of policy has been approved by the Secretary of State. On the other hand, it has been declared under equal authority that it is not intended that outstills should be suppressed in localities where experience shows that distilleries cannot be advantageously introduced. It is on these lines that the action of Government has been based."

The attitude of Sir Stuart Bayley towards the change is, however, fully reassuring. He says:—

"The number of outstills is being reduced wherever they appear to be more numerous than is necessary to satisfy the local demand for liquor; and as the fees are being gradually raised so as to force the retail price up to the price fixed by the distillery rate of duty for each district, the abkars in many cases refuse to accept settlement. The changes involve an increase in the retail price of liquor which is stubbornly resisted. In the Lieutenant-Governor's opinion, Mr. Westmacott deserves credit for the firm attitude he has maintained in adhering to the high fees fixed for outstills, and he entirely approves of the action of the Board in supporting this policy. The experiment must be allowed a full and fair trial; it was always anticipated that it would entail an immediate loss of revenue, and the deliberate intention throughout has been to force the abkars to increase their retail prices and so reduce consumption. If this result is attained, a temporary loss of revenue is comparatively a small matter, and unless the demand for liquor has been artificially stimulated by an undue cheapening of outstill liquor (as compared with the price maintained by distillery spirit), it is certain that the normal demand will re-assert itself and the revenues will recover. Sir Stuart Bayley has no doubt that the policy is a sound one. It must be introduced gradually and with discretion, and there should, in his opinion, be no going back from it, though the effects of bad seasons render its influence on the revenue more conspicuous than it would otherwise have been."

The reform may now be said on the whole to be safe, although the revenue authorities may not like it and may give it the most grudging support. The Board are of course nothing but human in their opposition. As responsible for the revenue, they are naturally jealous of reforms which have a disastrous effect upon the finances, but they have resisted these reforms already long enough, and they might well take a leaf out of the example of other Provincial Boards who appear to make comparatively far too little from the excise.

THE VILLAINOUS SALTPETRE!

It seems that, when the object is to persecute an individual who has incurred the displeasure of the authorities, the Great Circumlocution Office can throw aside its proverbial procrastination and strike with the celerity of the thunderbolt. The facts of the following case will abundantly illustrate the truth of this observation. A gentleman owning a saltpetre refinery in the neighbourhood of Calcutta was suddenly called away to his village home some miles away by the intelligence of a serious illness in his family. To comply with the rules of the Salt Department, he made over the charge of the refinery to two persons whose names are mentioned in his license as his authorised agents. There was not much work at the time to do, nor was any accession of work expected during the proprietor's absence. So far, therefore, as the proprietor himself was concerned, he did everything in his power to see that the regulations of the Department were not infringed. In human affairs, however, the proposing authority is not always the disposing one. Accordingly, after the proprietor had gone away, one of the agents he had left behind him was also called away from Calcutta by similar sudden news of illness to his country home. He left the refinery in charge of his colleague, promising to return as soon as possible. The proprietor in his absence knew nothing of all this. Meanwhile, a letter dated the 11th August 1890, was addressed to the proprietor, by the Assistant Commissioner of Salt Revenue, at Allahabad, warning him that he ran the risk of a prosecution and the suspension of his license if he permitted his refinery to work in the absence of an authorised agent. It is suspected that as the name of the agent that actually was in charge of the refinery after one had gone away did not occur in the Persian version of the license, it was assumed by the Persian establishment at Calcutta that work was going on in the refinery in the entire absence of an agent. The Assistant Commissioner at Allahabad in addressing the above letter, must have acted upon wrong information supplied to him by the Persian Salt establishment at Calcutta. This letter, however, did not reach the proprietor. The Assistant Commissioner despatched it to the officers at Calcutta with instructions to deliver it to the addressee. Search was made for the latter. The agent in charge of the refinery asked for it in order that he might transmit it to his master. He was not recognised as an agent, and the letter was not made over to him—but continued to be in the hands of the Salt establishment at Calcutta. In this state, a second letter was addressed from Dinapore to the proprietor, this time not by the Assistant Commissioner but by a subordinate officer, viz., the Superintendent of Salt Revenue, Patna-Calcutta circle, desiring the addressee, in the choice language of the Department, "to take early step (sic) to have a measuring basket made as early as possible." This second communication, dated the 16th August, also did not reach the proprietor, nor was it made over to his agent in the refinery. Three days after, on the 19th of August, a third communication was addressed to the poor man by the same officer, viz., the Superintendent, requesting the early transmission of the usual extract from the refinery register for the month of July as it had been overdue. Like its two predecessors, this letter also did not reach the addressee, nor was it made over to his authorised agent in the refinery. A little more than a week after this, an order was made by the Superintendent, on the 29th of August, suspending the license of the refinery, which had cost a fee of Rs. 50 and under which the refinery could be worked for one whole year, the effect of the suspension being that the refiner must take out a fresh license upon the payment of a fresh fee if he intends to continue work. After the order of suspension had been made, all the communications from the 11th of August to the 19th were included in one packet, and the order of suspension in another, and the two covers were despatched by post to the unfortunate refiner at his country address, which, it should be observed, had been all along known to the Salt Establishment at Calcutta. Thunderstruck, the poor man came to Calcutta and made a representation to the Superintendent, which, we are told, has not yet been acknowledged. Failing to move that officer, he addressed the Assistant Commissioner, with the same result. He has now appealed to the Commissioner at Agra. Is comment necessary on these proceedings?

Meanwhile, the suspended license has been ordered by the Assistant Commissioner to be delivered to the Department without delay. In compliance with that order, the unfortunate proprietor offers to return the document. His offer, however, is not accepted. The Department has plainly given him to understand that unless and until the saltpetre refuse is bonded godown, which was of course sealed immediately after the issue of the order suspending the license, he excised or destroyed at his cost, the surrender of the license would not be accepted. The intention in all this is to make the punishment of suspension last for as long a period as the subordinate officials can decently prolong it. We may, by way of parenthesis, remark that the demand of duty upon saltpetre refuse is certainly extraordinary. The Act would not justify it. The article is incapable of consumption, although, of course, it is capable of conversion into salt. Its only use, as far as we are aware, is for curing skins and making Kulpi baraf and ice-cream. Of course, dishonest men may clandestinely convert it into edible salt. But that would scarcely justify the administration in laying an embargo on the article and injuring honest trade. The policy is scarcely wise of interfering with honest trade for preventing possible dishonesty. Nothing but barrenness of invention could accept it for its simplicity. Then, again, the demand for the destruction of the article at the cost of the owners, without pointing out to them a place where they may bury it, is scarcely fair. In Calcutta and the Suburbs, land cannot be had for a song—sometimes not for love or money. Whither are the owners of the article to convey it for making it useless? The law should impose commands to which obedience might be possible.

THE Tribune appeals have been filed.

CHILD MARRIAGE IN INDIA.

SIR,—The progress of thought and the progress of enlightenment are so habitually coupled with each other, not only in Indian minds but in the minds of English statesmen and English thinkers, that both tendencies seem, in this country at least, to be equally inevitable and equally irresistible. It is inevitable, because European ideas have long been shaping our society into a mould, which itself is looked upon, however gratuitously, as a tangible sign of reform. It is inevitable, because the influences that environ us, such as the spread of education and the expansion of intellect, are perpetually gaining strength; and because the influences opposed to it are ever losing their hold upon the general level of Indian reason and conscience. But there are some extreme liberal principles that cannot be applied to our society in any of the various senses of which that most flexible term society is capable. To analyse those senses would be worse than useless; for, none has yet acquired a fixity. The question of child-marriage in our society, involves the deepest and most active concern for the greatest happiness of the greatest number, but an evolution of social conditions, either gradual or violent, is not to be brought about by a manifesto drawn up by Englishmen and endorsed by a "large and influential committee," as the Times of the 20th ultimo has it. Such an influence is scarcely likely to produce a "change" in our marriage law. While the Government has pledged not to interfere with the "religious beliefs" or the "domestic usages" of the people, it would be infinitely preposterous, if it imposes laws and makes changes, "which Hindu public opinion would condemn, or at which the Hindu conscience would take offence." A change is not improvement, nor is improvement a change. It indicates the weakness of tyranny and the tyranny of weakness. The advanced Hindu mind cannot approve a change which the public conscience utterly disapproves. From Hurry-Maitism or other exceptional cases of moral outrage, an inference of Indian moral degeneracy and decay has been drawn permeating and filtering down the English public. The remedy, as it has been observed, lies in raising the age of consent. The opinion is almost universal that the age of consent should be raised, although in formulating limitations, there is a difference of opinion. The question of State interference comes next, and although there is a conflict of opinions on this point, the first seems to be so completely merged in the second, that in advancing arguments in such a delicate and at the same time important question, our boldest apostles of reform lean to the side of legislation as the best and the safest means of checking the evils that virtually arise from child-marriage. With all their efforts in confronting results however pernicious, it is apparent that they hit upon the wrong thing to say. They are like the particular class of capitalists who, as owners of land, want to rob fundholders of all kinds by a strategy which is more dexterous than honest. It is all very fair to remove a bad custom because it is bad, but it is foolish in this case to appeal to the unsailable majesty of the Legislature, without considering that we have it in our own hands to crown the good work. Every intelligent, reasonable being should not live with his wife until she attains the age of puberty. This depends upon the growth of the girl, and varies generally between 10 and 12. If the marriageable age be raised by an expression of popular opinion represented by chosen men in the different districts and sub-districts, I hope it will have quite the effect of raising the age of consent, provided each member of society looks upon the decision as a moral sanction. Those who go the other way and identify our social interests with those of our rulers, not only disorganise society but lay the axe at its root. England admits special instances as applicable to every existing population of India. These instances are regarded as facts, and facts are generalised into a law. We should not allow this, because the generalisation suggests a cause which we deny and shuts out another which we assert. Never mind causes, until we have clearly ascertained a larger number of facts, and when these facts are clearly ascertained, let us record them fearlessly in terms as wide as the truth demands. In the present instance, we cannot recognise isolated facts in all their breadth and sweep, when we have to consult the interests of 130 millions. In the last annual Parliamentary Blue-book on the "Moral and Material Progress and Condition of India," the incarceration of 3,000 women were not taken much into account among a large population of 130 millions. But Maitism more than makes up for the crime list. Pessimism is not a remedy for the evils of humanity. This is regarded with aversion by both the intellect and conscience of any educated and civilized community. The same may be said of Ignorance when it manifests itself in glaring colours and asserts its authority over Reason. In the child-marriage question, the English public is enlightened by the reports of Mr. Malabari, whom it calls the fittest medium for the disclosure of such facts as are not known to the Englishmen. It is a pity that, while our rulers are ignorant of the import of our Sastras upon which our marriage laws depend, they want to introduce a change in such laws. The Times says:—"A distinctly sacramental character was given to the marriage rite, the happiness of the married couple being no part of the plan." What an unwarrantable assumption! The promulgators of our Sastras had a far greater insight into the nature of man, his position and prospects in life, than the biggest European metaphysician from Thales to Comte, and later on, to the physiologico-psychologists of England. Their idea of happiness was deeper than the utilitarian theory of Bentham or Mill. Their ethical culture was greater than that of a Shaftsbury, a Hutchinson, or a Professor Sedgwick. They have grounded our marriage rites upon such a firm and well-established basis that happiness—I mean real happiness—of the married couple must be the undeniable result. It is only by our own weakness that we are losing ground. We want to kick off the injunctions of our Sastras, because, under the light of the West, we fancy that the whole is a dream. Poor souls! The future of India, I dare not predict, but I say with undoubting confidence, that we have worse days in store for us, if Government in any way interfere with our "religious beliefs" or our "domestic usages." The reconciliation between the East and the West is a condition dependent upon the harmonious relation between the governors and the governed; and if we are still to realize the chronic antagonism and the bitterness of feeling caused by new innovations due to the plasticity of the Indian brain, the future is a blank to stare at!

JUGGODISHUR MOOKERJI.

THE DOORGA POOJA HOLIDAYS MEMORIAL.

[Concluded from p. 502.]

That the Devipaksha or the Doorga fortnight commences on the day after the Mabälajä (14th October, 1890) and terminates on the day after the Lakshmi Pooja day (28th October 1890). All these days are held equally sacred, with this difference only, that some of them are considered more, and others less, holy according to the number and nature of the religious ceremonies enjoined to be performed on those days. The first four days of the fortnight after the Mabälajä, therefore, were not made close holidays which commenced on the Panchumi or fifth day of the waxing moon as being the preparatory day of the Doorga Pooja. Besides the common sense view of the absolute necessity of the suspension of public business being initiated from this day for the purpose of making ready the thousand and one things required for the Pooja ceremonies on the following day, the religious aspect of it may be somewhat conceived by the Christian public when it is viewed with reference to the day previous to the Sabbath being regarded according to Mark XV. 42, as the preparation day. It is from this consideration that public Offices are generally closed earlier on Saturdays. The Sasthi or the 6th day of the waxing moon, as before observed, is as sacred a Pooja day as the three following worship days. Its importance as an inaugural ceremony day and as the last day for completing the final decorations of the image before a particular hour, for putting up the house in order, for making arrangements for the reception of guests, for attending to the initiation ceremony which needs must be done by the householder personally, and for various other reasons, have already been referred to. Then follow the worship and Visarjan days the four days proposed to be notified under the Act. The four days which intervene between the Visarjan and the Lakshmi Pooja days of the Kojigara Poornima, besides being the concluding days of the Devipaksha above described, when the pious Hindus perform many religious functions, constitute the only period when the religious salutations, visitings, embracings of relatives, connections and friends are to be made under a strict injunction, when welcomes and farewells with their concomitant social observances and amenities take place, when really all the members of the genteel classes of both sexes, orthodox and heterodox poojah-makers and non-poojah-makers really enjoy the pleasures of the grand autumnal festival, the previous period having been one of stiff formality and rule-bound etiquette.

That the absolute necessity of closing on these days, i.e., from the 18th to the 28th October inclusive, this year, neither from a purely religious nor from a social point of view, can be gainsaid; and this necessity if so great in respect of the permanent residents in Calcutta, its magnitude, in respect of people having their family homes at various distances from Calcutta, cannot be over-estimated. To this consideration should be added those advantages attaching to an unbroken period of long vacation which in these days of easy travel are availed of in view of renovating health and otherwise enjoying life after a hard year's work. It is for the benefit of the non-permanent residents of Calcutta who visit their homes in different parts of Bengal and who form the largest proportion of the employés in the Private and Public Offices in Calcutta, that one day (the 29th October 1890) has been added to enable them to rejoin their posts, thus making up the number of 12 days hitherto allowed as the Doorga Pooja holidays. It appears then that, in spite of the Pandit's showing, not a single day, out of the 12 days, can be curtailed without most seriously hurting the religious feelings of the people and putting them to great discomfort and inconvenience. It may not be irrelevant here to mention that, though there are numerous Hindu households in which the Doorga Pooja is celebrated either in the form of an image with the inseparable Ghata or in the form of a Ghata only, there are many such, in which it is not celebrated at all, but the members thereof visit their relatives, connections, neighbours, friends or patrons, on the occasion, as invited guests, they all regarding the Pooja, in many respects, religious and social, as their own, not to mention the many particular duties arising from the Pooja occasion which they are obliged to perform during this almost universal Hindu festival. It is almost impossible to convey to a foreigner an exact idea of the religious fervour and hilarious spirit awakened on this occasion among all classes of Hindus of both sexes and of all ages, who crowd the temples and altars at all hours to witness the image and particular ceremonies—different degrees of merit being attached to seeing, bowing to, worshipping and touching (where touching is allowed) the goddess. Nor can a non-Hindu realize the anxious and tremulous care with which a pious Hindu has to store up for this august Yajna—the Aswamedha of the Kaliyuga—various sorts of things with well-defined characteristics so that no deviation therefrom or from the modus operandi of a ritual, —nay, not the utterance of the syllable of a mantra with a wrong accent—may occur to bring evil to the family. Thus with respect to many, what long days are spent in seeing to a proper collection of the necessary articles—what anxious solicitude are they subject to, for the purpose of getting every thing done in the true orthodox style! It is perhaps not generally known that this religious vigilance is an index of an unostentatious spirit of silent loyalty to the reigning sovereign, for sayeth the Sastra—"Any deviation from this great Yajna is fraught with danger to the state—yea, its utter destruction."

That it is alleged that the effect of notifying all the Doorga Pooja holidays under the Act is to interfere most seriously with, commerce and trade, shipping and monetary business. This allegation has not yet been made out. There is not, as every impartial inquirer will be convinced, anything like serious interference with business, or any general hardship at all, even to the European mercantile community. The embarrassments of particular firms, of those who speculate out of all proportion to their capital, are in the long run scarcely to be remedied by the reduction of Hindu holidays and keeping Public Offices open. But admitting this evil such as it is, the new departure merely helps a small community at the sacrifice of the best interests of a larger one and, to quote the words of Sir Rivers Thompson, involves a departure from the principle on which the policy of Government is based; it may, however, very well be avoided in the following way, viz.—The Holidays being advertised before the beginning of the year the merchants may so shape their bills and pro-notes, when executing them, that the due dates may not fall during any of the 12 days of the Poojah Holidays, it being a question of a little pre-arrangement and fore-thought, which should be resorted to in order to avoid unnecessary friction with the children of the soil, more specially when the bulk of the native merchants are agreeable to this arrangement. But assuming this interference to be unavoidable, it could not have been urged in support of the Government action, without the previous conviction that these holidays are divisible as suggested by the Pandit, but as his suggestion is untenable, there is nothing to justify the action. The correspondence, published in the Gazette, moreover discloses different opinions as to the effect of the interference. The bodies in whose interest the Government takes action are not unanimous, there being a split in the Chamber of Commerce itself, and its reference to the result of the canvassing at its anniversary meeting is a technicality, and not a genuine expression of its opinion as a whole body including the members representing the Exchange Banks. The split reduces the voice of the Chamber to that of 36 Christian members of the Calcutta mercantile community. The National Chamber of Commerce, as representing native trade and commerce and monetary transactions, is opposed to the measure. The Shipping Master, as representing the shipping interest, has no fear of this interest being injured by the usual holidays. The Registrar of Calcutta gives the most cogent reasons against the change. The British Indian Association and the Indian Association, the Hindu press, all entitled to speak authoritatively on the subject, are strongly opposed to any alteration in the sound policy of the Government in respect of the holidays which, as before stated, commanded from the Hindus sentiments of the deepest gratitude. If, then, it is only a few of the members of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce and a few European tradesmen of Calcutta, who even now enjoy the advantage of active cash sales during the holidays, and only one Bank, which had formerly enjoyed the privilege of notifying holidays, but whose unsettled ways, in this respect, obliged the Government to take away the privilege, who suggest the measure, your Memorialists can not understand why His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor should see things in a different light from that in which he had negatived the application of the Chamber in view of the undesirability of curtailing the national Hindu holidays for the sake of affording any insignificant relief to a few individual alien merchants.

That if in 1882, even after the passing of the Negotiable Instruments Act, the Government thought it inadvisable to re-open the question of Hindu Holidays, your Memorialists beg to submit that nothing new has occurred since, except the erroneous opinion of the Pandit, to justify the new policy inaugurated by the Government.

That it is scarcely fair to argue in favor of the new policy that, because during the holidays the restrictions upon business are not observed by "natives" themselves and that certain classes of shop-keepers and vendors in the different Bazars ply a brisk trade, therefore the hardship to Hindus in being obliged to attend public offices during the period, would not be great. A careful examination of the matter will show, 1st, that these shop-keepers and vendors are not all Hindus, 2ndly, that there are thousands who cannot afford to stop their daily earnings without starving, 3rdly, that particular trades and industries start up and become brisk, not only on account of the holidays as in all countries in the world, but that they deal in articles without which it would be impossible to carry out the formalities of the Poojah. Then there must be shops always open to cater for the ordinary necessities of life as well as for the extra demand of this time of worship, hospitality and liberality. Then again it is a general belief among the Hindus, that sales effected on the Poojah days bring in good luck, and Christian merchants not unoften share in this belief, finally in these days also presents of a particular character are made by shop-keepers and Bazar people to the Goddess which are brought by them with great care from distant places, not to mention the votive offerings which accumulate from various localities. The briskness of trade which but for the holidays is not worth the name at this season of the year, from this point of view, instead of being an argument in favor, should be used against the present measure. To withhold a holiday upon such a ground in any country would be like refusing it because a great fare is its necessary accompaniment and bakers' shops supply in large quantities the pabulum of life. It may also be observed in this connection that in every community there are people very pious and strict observers of religious rules shading down into different grades till the unbelieving, scoffing, Mammon-worshipping, glee-making and Bacchanalian classes are reached, all of whom avail themselves of public holidays, religious or other, and will it do for any Government to withhold granting religious holidays in view of the practices of these classes of the community? Is the principle upon which the Sabbath or any other, Christian festival is a holiday in Christian lands, to be impeached because there are so few genuine church-going people—so few who duly perform religious services and so many who desecrate the same in a thousand ways? The keeping out of view the impolicy of curtailing the long established Hindu Holidays is patent; nevertheless the Government, allured by a vague and impossible distinction of any portion of them being strictly religious or otherwise, has, under the notion, gone the length of dividing them upon the suggestion of a non-Smartha Pandit. In behalf of this new policy it is shown first, that inasmuch as the Mahomedan Holidays are granted, in the same way as the non-religious portion of the Hindu holidays are now to be treated, that is, by publication by a second notification, without hitherto giving rise to any inconvenience to the members of the Moslem community, and as a similar practice obtains in other Presidencies, the present change of policy will not operate prejudicially to the interests of the Hindu community in Bengal; secondly, that for the purpose of granting relief to members of the mercantile community certain offices are to be kept open during the holidays not under the Act and that the Heads of such offices will make certain office arrangements by which the fewest number of Hindu employes will be kept at work for the shortest period of time possible. The first argument is met by the fact that the Doorga Poojah festival is of a particular character in Bengal, its peculiarities are numerous as regards the very formation and material of the image, the mode of celebrating the festival, the duration of the same and thousand other things. A measure in respect of these holidays which has suited Madras and Bombay cannot be expected to suit Bengal. And this non-suitability will be seen the more, the more this part of the subject is studied and examined. With reference to the Mahomedans, the granting of holidays not under the Act cannot for these reasons cause any inconvenience, because the nature of their religious observances is quite different from that of the Hindus, and the number of Mahomedan office employes is considerably smaller. The second argument seems in your memorialists' humble judgment to be wrong in principle. No single member of the Hindu community can, because he is an Office servant, be deprived of the privilege of enjoying a holiday granted to the whole Hindu community under a beneficent policy based upon the British Sovereign's solemn pledge—a holiday moreover which has been shown to be sacred in every one of its true aspects. And then again as an individual exception such person would feel the deprivation most keenly when he finds that he suffers it not for a public purpose—not for any extraordinary exigency of the State, to meet which he would be ever ready for any sacrifice, serving as he does a virtuous Sovereign, devotion to whom is as much his duty as to make a Poojah—but simply to help a few, a very few foreign merchants who may be somewhat inconvenienced or who may think they can make a little money during at most four, not consecutive, days' time, to which the contention is now narrowed down. This argument must therefore prove fallacious.

That both the above arguments may be viewed in another most important point of view. The British Government, regarding the Mahomedan community far behind the Hindus in point of education, is naturally inclined to indulge it in various ways. So in the matter of holidays, such is the commendable anxiety of Government not to give cause to the masses of ignorant Moslems to interpret the motives of Government as tending to interfere with their religion, that in respect to Mahomedan holidays not under the Act there is little chance of these being curtailed in future, according to the requirements of any member of the Christian mercantile community or to any change of views of the Executive Government. A glance at some points in the history of the Mahomedan holidays will make this clear. Formerly, on Mahomedan holidays the Civil Courts only used to be closed, but there being then a few Mahomedan employes in Government Offices who used to obtain leave under Office orders, no general Government proclamation was needed. Since the increase of Mahomedan appointments in Government Offices, Government has only very recently thought fit to advertise Mahomedan holidays under an executive order. But if your memorialists are not very much mistaken, such is the spirit of indulgence, that the object is safeguarded, against the possibility of any misunderstanding being made, by the instruction that all Mahomedans are to have these holidays. And as a matter of fact, no Mahomedan is compelled to work on these holidays against his will. Again, the number of offices which are to remain closed on occasions of Mahomedan festivals are on the increase in reverse ratio with those which are to be closed on Hindu holidays. In Offices which do not come under exceptions in respect of Hindu holidays not under the Act, Mahomedan employes will now have the privilege of enjoying vacations under both Mahomedan and Hindu holiday rules. For many long years therefore the Mahomedan community should have no fear of their holidays being curtailed. In the case of the Hindus, however, their total number of holidays is being periodically curtailed. The number of Doorga and Laksmi Poojah holidays heretofore safeguarded by notification under the Act has now been cut down from 12 to 6 days, and even the Punchumi and Sashti days so absolutely required for religious purposes have been thrown out of the operation of the Act. The remaining six days including two Sundays, of the hitherto allowed holidays of co-ordinate importance with the above six days, have not only come under an executive order whereby their future reduction is contemplated, but already certain offices have been exempted from this order, and even the Secretariat Offices not required to be kept open for mercantile purposes, have been excepted. The executive arrangement in such Offices by which the least number of Hindu employes for the shortest number of hours are expected to be at work by His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal (though the arrangement is wrong in principle) will, it is feared, be impracticable and, even if in the initiatory year or for the matter of that during the present régime, the rule be adhered to, it cannot but be relaxed as years roll on, or under future administrations, and more Offices will come under the exceptions and more clerks for more hours will be required to work in proportion to the development of the all enveloping British commerce and the peremptory demands of the merchant princes; till the advertisement of these six days will cease to encumber the future pages of the Gazette. And who knows that the notification under the Act will not also cease to be issued in some not distant future year? The appointment of non-Hindu clerks is also talked of in certain Offices, and certainly a more promising method of discouraging the cry for the Poojahs could not be devised. Be that as it may, the fact of the matter is that the all powerful Bank of Bengal and the Bengal Chamber of Commerce accept the concession, made by the Government by curtailment of the long established Hindu holidays, as an instalment only for the time being of the reduction of the holidays, necessary to release trade of the so called restriction under which it now labours. This attitude of the Bank and the Chamber is a positive indication that they are dissatisfied with the present concession and will be more extortionate in their demands in future. The worthy Secretary Mr. Cotton admits in his letter to the Chamber of Commerce and other public bodies, "that the attitude of the Chamber becomes a stronger one every year and that in the Doorga Poojah holidays only the Lieutenant-Governor is disposed at present to consent to any reduction under the Act. The other public holidays might remain unchanged for the present."

That under the recent orders in the offices not excepted under the executive order, Hindus may be said to have the privilege of enjoying a vacation, both on account of Hindu and Mahomedan festivals. But they do not consider this new favor as a compensation for the consequences of the new policy by which some of their co-religionists would suffer and they themselves in time would come under the exceptions.

That as regards the origin of the Doorga Poojah, it may be traced to Raja Ram Chandra, the hero of the great epic Ramayana, the beau-ideal of what a sovereign should be, who celebrated it as an autumnal festival in its present form. It has since been observed not only in all India but in certain Buddhist dominions and in not a few islands in the Indian Ocean. Its celebration by every Hindu is not only strictly enjoined in the Shastras as a meritorious deed, but the omission of it is declared to be a positive sin. It has its esoteric and exoteric aspect. Its institutions have so entwined themselves with the innermost fibres of Hindu society from long ages that all Indian households, whatever may be the intellectual condition of their members, are astir with the enthusiasm on the occasion of the Poojah. Its importance has attracted the notice of Western scholars who have laboured to trace its analogies in certain festivals of distant lands in distant times—in Assyria and ancient Egypt, in Greece and Rome, and even in pre-Moslem Arabia. Although from historic and other causes the worship of the Goddess, like other old institutions, has been swamped, or more or less abandoned in many other parts of India, it may still be recognised under the name of the Dussehra Festival so universal throughout India. But of the magnitude of its importance and the enthusiastic manner of its celebration in Bengal, no adequate conception can be conveyed to a European. After repeated and prolonged discussion of the subject, the Government fixed the minimum number of days for which, in due regard to the protection of Hindu religion it should grant holidays on this occasion. These days, therefore, cannot by any possibility be curtailed to any extent without prejudice to the due performance of the religious duties of the whole Hindu population.

This memorial is summed up as follows :—

1st.—The minimum number of Doorga Poojah Holidays now allowed (12 days) cannot be divided as days of "religious obligation," and days of "social observances only." The distinction is a non sequitur because founded upon wrong issues of a still more wrong opinion of a wrongly held authority on the subject.

2nd.—Advertising the 12 days as Doorga Poojah Holiday under the Act does not interfere seriously with trade generally, some few Christian tradesmen of Calcutta being only partially affected; nor with the shipping business, because its representative does not complain of it; nor with monetary business generally, because the exchange banks do not require it to be altered.

3rd.—The fact of Mahomedan Holidays advertised under executive order only not having caused any inconveniences to the Mahomedans and the recognition of the principle based upon the above distinction holding good in other presidencies, do not, as has been shown above, affect the question, the cases not being parallel.

4th. The briskness of certain kind of business in Indian quarters during the Poojah cannot be cited as a ground for curtailing any portion of the Holidays because such business is transacted by Hindus as well, and because of the great fair which is its necessary accompaniment.

5th. The arrangement in certain offices for the few Hindu employes to work during the Poojah is unjust, as it would operate as a restriction upon the performance of their religious duties, such arrangements moreover being demanded not for a public purpose but for securing some monetary advantage to some private Christian gentlemen who happen to be merchants and tradesmen.

6th. The Sashti day is as indispensable a Poojah day as the three following days and the Visarjan day and that the Panchumi, preceding the Sashti, as an absolutely necessary and important day, it being a preparatory day for the Poojah with all classes of Poojah makers, and that the four days between the Visarjan and the Laksmi Poojah as the terminal days of the Devipaksha are days for the discharge of many religious duties, religio-social formalities and other important works, and lastly that the day added to the last day of the Laksmi Poojah is necessary to enable people from the Mofussil to rejoin office.

7th. That with reference to the accompanying circular it is apparent that even in the initiatory year, nay even immediately after the publication of Your Excellency's order, the Currency Office has been ordered to be kept open as usual, the hours of business as contemplated by your Excellency in Council are not to be contracted and your memorialists further understand that far from 3 or 4 clerks being required to work in all the excepted offices taken together during the holidays, advertised under the executive order, in the Currency Office alone not less than 25 Hindus have already been ordered to attend office during these holidays. And that at the Government Account Branch at the Bank as well as in private offices no consideration is likely to be shown to the Hindu Assistants as the Government was given to understand. Thus the fear expressed by Your Excellency's memorialists that the arrangements made by office masters for working with the least number of Hindus and by contracting hours of business are impracticable, is about to be realized even in the first year of the promulgation of the order.

8th. That in the Currency Office, in the Office of the Registrar of Assurances and in the Government Account Branch at the Bank and in most of the other exempted Offices, as will appear by an enquiry being made, little or no work is done by the Christian merchants, directly. These places are the more favourite resorts of the Indian trades people and the public generally, and when those who are mostly affected by the closure of those Offices for twelve days together, do not want it, Your Excellency's memorialists consider it a very great hardship that their co-religionists in public service who are debarred from speaking for themselves, should be compelled to forego their religious observances for the sake of merely upholding the zid of a few alien merchants who deal mostly in cheques instead of currency notes, &c., and, as has been shown, only a microscopic number of them have any thing to do with the Office of the Registrar of Assurances and the Government Account Branch at the Bank, &c.

9th. That the so called inconvenience to trade and commerce on account of 12 days of the holidays in succession, complained of by the Chamber, can better be remedied by the trading community themselves generally, with a little forethought and prearrangement by so shaping their bills and promissory notes as the due dates thereof might not fall within the 12 days.

Your Excellency's memorialists humbly pray that, out of Your Excellency's usual catholic spirit and unbounded generosity and magnanimity, Your Excellency will condescend to give this Memorial a careful perusal and, attaching a due weight to the reasons set forth therein in Your Excellency's deliberations on the recent order about the curtailment of the Hindu Holidays, and regarding it in a political, religious, social and humanitarian point of view, to order that it may be reconsidered and reversed, so that a widespread discontent and alarm among the whole Hindu population of Her Majesty's Indian dominions, consequent upon a direct interference with their religion, in spite of Her Majesty's repeated emphatic pledge to the contrary, may be prevented; and thus love and attachment to the British throne firmly secured by ordering the 12 days' Holidays hitherto granted on account of the Doorga and Laksmi Poojahs to be continued as usual.

And your Memorialists as in duty bound shall ever pray.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

REGRET.

If I had known, O loyal heart
When, hand to hand, we said farewell,
How for all time our paths would part,
What shadow o'er our friendship fell,
I should have clasped your hand so closed
In the warm pressure of my own,
That memory still would keep its grasp—
If I had known.

If I had known, when far and wide,
We loitered through the summer land,
What Presence wandered by our side,
And o'er you stretched its awful hand,
I should have hushed my careless speech,
To listen, dear, to every tone
That from your lips fell low and sweet—
If I had known.

If I had known when your kind eyes
Met mine in parting, true and sad—
Eyes gravely tender, gently wise,
And earnest, rather, more than glad—
How soon the lids would lie above
As cold and white as sculptured stone,
I should have treasured every glance—
If I had known.

If I had known how, from the strife
Of fears, hopes, passions, here below,
Unto a purer, higher life
That you were called, oh, friend, to go,
I should have stayed my foolish tears
And hushed each idle sigh and moan
To bid you last, a long godspeed—
If I had known.

If I had known to what strange place,
What mystic, distant, silent shore,
You calmly turned your steadfast face,
What time your footsteps left my door
I should have forged a golden link
To bind the hearts so constant grown
And kept it constant ever there—
If I had known.

If I had known that, until Death
Shall with his finger touch my brow,
And still the quickening of the breath
That stirs with life's full meaning now,
So long my feet must tread the way
Of our accustomed paths alone,
I should have prized your presence more—
If I had known.

If I had known how soon for you
Drew near the ending of the fight,
And on your vision, fair and new,
Eternal peace dawned into sight,
I should have begged, as love's last gift,
That you, before God's great white throne
Would pray for your poor friend on earth—
If I had known.

CHRISTIAN REID.

NEWS AND OUR COMMENTS.

THE Bengal Government returned to Calcutta on Tuesday the 11th. There was a goodly number of welcomers—official, semi-official and unofficial—at the Railway station. Sir Steuart was joined by Lady Bayley the next day, with Miss Bayley whom they give away to Mr. W. B. Gladstone. The wedding comes off early next month. The sooner the merrier. We wish them godspeed and happiness.

Sir John Edgar has returned from Europe and joined his post.

THERE are to be several changes in the heads of local administrations. Sir Steuart Bayley makes over charge to Sir Charles Elliott on the 16th December, leaving Calcutta the same day to catch the Bombay mail of the 20th. Lord Connemara has obtained permission of Her Majesty to resign the Governorship of Madras. He departs probably in March next. We suspect his presence is required there at the call of his spouse—dear no more. Sir Charles Crosthwaite from Burma replaces Sir Charles Elliott as Public Works Minister. Mr. A. Mackenzie goes to Burma, and Mr. A. P. Macdonnell, the Home Secretary, becomes Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces.

IN the Governor-General's Legislative Council, Syed Ameer Hossein and Raja Durga Churn Law have sat out their terms and are to be succeeded by Nawab Asanoolla, of Dacca, and Sir Romesh Chunder Mitter. The appointment is no particular honor, perhaps, to a retired Judge who has acted as Chief Justice of our High Court. The Nawab, doubtless, will appreciate the fun of being an Honourable man for the nonce. We hope his recent travels have restored Sir Romesh's health sufficiently to bear real earnest work. The country expects much from his ripe experience. He belongs to no party and is respected by all. His selection is sure to give universal satisfaction. We wish we could say half as much for the other selection. The officials who know their man will not be disappointed, though. An excellent host has been secured, if not any addition to legislative wisdom. Of speeches, good set speeches, there need be no want, if great men care for such yarn, any more than of sermons in England. What we are afraid of is that the extent of contributions to debate or advice may be in inverse ratio to those to public subscriptions.

THE several Secretariats of the India Government have begun pouring in into the capital. The last to come back is the Foreign Office, which stays out at Simla the meandering down tour of the Viceroy—to draw one more month's Simla allowances than the other departments.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

THE last Simla Season was significantly unhealthy. It commenced with influenza and pneumonia and closed with smallpox. Both the Viceroy and Lady Lansdowne are sick of the place already. Her Excellency went away to England, while His Excellency suffered long and much. It was at one time rumoured that he meditated an immediate retirement, to escape the Simla climate. That ought to settle the "Exodus" question, during the present Vice-royalty at any rate.

MR. Herbert Gladstone has declined with thanks the chair of the Indian Congress for the current year. No Chairman has yet been fixed upon. Why should not Father Hume allow himself to be elected? Surely, he should at least have the chance given him of refusing the iron crown of his own forging. The Congress will be held this year in this city. The idea of holding it at the Town Hall has been given up. Kumar Debendra Mullick has placed his Tivoli Gardens free of charge at the service of the national gathering. This is the sixth year of the Congress, and it is time to dissolve it or place it on a permanent footing. Towards the latter end, Mr. M. B. Namjoshi has a proposal for

"1. The foundation of a Congress-hall and a library and Congress office thereto attached.

2. The foundation of out-houses or barracks for the delegates from the different provinces to be maintained by the provincial committees of the Congress.

3. The establishment of branch or Taluka committees with paid officers for the popular education of the masses as to their duties to the state, to the society in general and to themselves."

The preparations for the gathering are not on a luxuriant scale. The number of delegates has been cut down to one thousand, and the expenses will be limited to bare housing and boarding.

BABOO Surendranath Banerjee is gaining in the confidence of Government which would not retain him in the regular service. Sir Rivers Thompson accepted him as an Honorary Presidency Magistrate. Sir Stuart Bayley has given the Baboo independent second class Magisterial powers in his own place at Barrackpore. But will he be saved the ignominy of disaffiliation of the Law School of his College?

BOMBAY has opened an asylum at Matunga for the aggregation, commonly called segregation, of lepers. Fortynine vagrant lepers were on the 7th instant driven in carts to their new home where they will be provided with free board and lodging. Other unfortunes in the Presidency must prepare themselves for the jolt.

THE Nimtola Burning Ghat will be added to for the accommodation of those taking dead bodies there for cremation. When the Port Commissioners raised the present structure, they did not provide for any shelter for such persons. The Municipal Commissioners have agreed to remove the want, the Port Commissioners consenting to find the land.

A NATIVE policeman while carrying a lighted kerosine lamp tripped and fell. The lamp exploded and burnt him severely about the face and head. He is in hospital.

HERE is a judicial denunciation of imprisonment for debt:—

"On October 11 His Honour Judge Abdy sat at the Edmonton County Court to dispose of a large number of judgment summonses, the amounts varying from a few shillings to a good many pounds, chiefly debts incurred with tradesmen. His Honour spoke very strongly upon the existence of a 'stupid law' which made it incumbent upon County Court Judges to adjudicate upon judgment summonses in the existing mode. It was the most miserable of all the duties which County Court Judges had to perform, because they were never sure that what was told to them about the means of the defendant was true. Tradesmen foolishly gave credit to many people of whom little or nothing was known, and when payment for goods supplied could not be obtained, County Court Judges were asked to send the debtors to prison. He was of opinion that no one should be deprived of his liberty in reference to civil debts, unless it was conclusively shown that the debtor possessed the means of paying, and would not. He certainly would never in future make an order of commitment unless it was proved to his satisfaction that the person who owed the money had had the means of paying it. If tradesmen suffered, it was their own fault for giving credit. He would stop the system as far as he could, and would insist upon undeniable proof of possession of means by defendant before he ordered a commitment. Imprisonment was intended for acts of violence, felony, and many other offences, but not for debts. During the day, His Honour refused to make orders in numerous instances, and observed that it was remarkable what small interest plaintiffs seemed to take in the cases. They were chiefly conducted by agents who made a little money by appearing for plaintiffs, who seldom thought it worth their while to attend."

THEY are running an electric subterranean railway between London and Stockwell.

It has been ascertained, from statistics for whatever they may be worth, that of dark haired women 79 per cent. are married and of blondes 55 per cent. Again, fair-haired people are less able to withstand the insanitary conditions of large towns than dark-complexioned, the conclusion being that the law of natural selection operates against their increase.

THERE is no waste:—

"Until lately the cotton waste used on printing presses has been cleaned from the oil and re-used, the grease being considered as useless and thrown away. It has, however, been found that the oil thus destroyed can be made, after very simple treatment, to yield first-class printing ink, and it has been ascertained that one ton of this spent waste yields about fourteen hundredweight of oil, from which ink of an improved quality and a reduced price is manufactured."

THE longest tunnel is that of Segemnitz, a mining town in Hungary. It is 16,524 metres long, or 1,600 more than the St. Gothard, and 4,000 more than the Mont Cenis. It is 6 feet high and 5 feet wide, and was built in the course of about a hundred years.

A SCHOOLMASTER scoured a boy's mouth with soap for bad language. The boy soon after died of diphtheria. His parents traced the disease to the soap, and has sued the schoolmaster for damages. Unhappy pedagogue! we hope he will meet with a sane judge. For the rest, the incident should be a warning against the indiscriminate use of these Western abominations.

THE publishing firm of W. & R. Chambers has been registered as a limited company with a capital of £100,000, in £100 shares divided among members of the family and employes.

THE proprietors of the Birmingham Daily Post charged Mr. Moffatt, special Correspondent of the New York Herald, with theft of a copy of the Post containing a detailed notice of the life and death of Cardinal Newman. He was found at the telegraph office with the copy, cutting out slips and pasting them on forms for the purpose of telegraphing to New York. Moffatt did not deny the offence and pleaded guilty to the "indelicacy" of appropriating the copy. The Magistrate too took the same view and permitted the summons to be withdrawn.

AFRICAN ANTS.

"The bashikonai ants must be a terrible plague. They travel night and day, in armies miles long. The elephant and gorilla fly before them; the black man runs for his life so soon as the ants are seen. It is related by a traveller that as he was going up one of the mouths of the Zambesi, he saw a whole village suddenly deserted by the inhabitants, who fled with all they could carry off, a proceeding which as there was no foe in sight, rather puzzled him till he found they were fleeing from the ants. When these ants enter a hut, they clear it of every living thing in a few minutes. Huge cockroaches, almost as large as mice, centipedes, mice, and rats are instantly devoured. A strong rat is killed in less than a minute, and in another minute its bones are picked. A leopard, dog, or deer is soon dispatched and devoured, for they kill by their numbers. They are quite half an inch long, and one variety is so strong that it will bite pieces clean out of the flesh. They possess, however, one meritorious quality—they mortally hate, and, whenever they can, put to death the mischievous white ants which make such destruction in houses. In addition to these and the sand ants, which bite like scorpions, leaving a distressing pain behind them, there are several varieties of flies which sting horribly, such as the igogonai—small gnats—whose bites go through the tough hide of the negroes, causing a terrible itch; the ibolai—flies or gnats—which sting as though with a needle, and whistle as they dash at you; the richouma, which fill themselves with your blood before you know they are there, and then leave an itching that lasts for hours, varied at intervals by certain sharp stabs of pain; the sloway, or nest-building flies, not quite so big as a bee, which cling to a man even in the water, and assail the natives with such ferocity that if a canoe, by chance, touch one of their nests, the men instantly dive overboard."

THE Roman prototypes of the modern printer, engraver, binder and bookseller were librarii, librarioli, biblioepi and bibliopola. The librarii multiplied books by transcribing MSS.; the librarioli illustrated them by ornament on the title pages, margins and terminations; the biblioepi employed their skill on the embellishment of their exteriors; and the bibliopola were engaged in the disposal of them.

WE read in the Effective Advertiser :—

"Jules Verne's workshop is at the top of a three-story house. A corner room with windows looking in two directions is his combined study and bed-room. In his library, which adjoins it, hangs a big map of the world. It is marked all over, the routes taken by the heroes of his romances being indicated by means of lines and flags. His penmanship is small, and the pages of his manuscripts are covered with corrections and interlineations. He rewrites his stories many times. Of his last book he made no fewer than ten versions before he brought it to perfection. He has been at work for nearly thirty-seven years, producing on an average two books a year."

That shows—and it is one instance of many—that the longer a man practises writing, the more difficult it becomes.

WHAT a development of manufacturing industry does the following cutting from the same journal exhibit!

"A list of the firms of papermakers who were represented at the inspection of the works of the Manchester Ship Canal gives an imposing idea of the extent of the papermaking industry in Lancashire and on its borders. The magnitude of the import trade in connection with it is indicated by the fact that our annual import of the raw material now amounts to half a million of tons. The representative of one important firm stated that one-third of our entire paper trade will probably be carried on in the district served by the canal. He prophesied that this new and commodious water-way will enable the papermakers in that part to save every year a sum of money equal to the entire cost of working and maintaining the canal."

Judging from casual observation in this country, whence the cheap and nasty German rag has driven out the sound British article and where mills are starting up, we were disposed to a pessimist view of the prospects of the British paper trade. It gives us sincere pleasure to find ourselves mistaken.

RAI BAHADAR S. Subramaniam Iyer, of Madras, visited the Monegar Choultry and, on learning that the inmates wanted Kumbhis, then and there gave a cheque for the purpose. Such visits are always welcome. The pity of it is that they are Like those of angels' short and far between.

HAVING served for eleven years in the Italian Army and risen to be an Artillery Lieutenant, Phoad Pacha, youngest brother of the Khedive, has joined the Turkish Army as an Artillery officer and been taken in as an honorary Aid-de-Camp to the Sultan.

IN New York, they have a Ladies' Club. It was started a few months ago with thirty members. They now number over four hundred. They hold lectures, readings and social meetings. There is a restaurant and a set of sleeping-apartments. What a dreadful place that must be! Four hundred, and all ladies! bluestockings and reds, and no mutes!

THE Chamber of Commerce, after its successful raid against the Doorga Pooja holidays, suddenly showed a humane desire to respect the religious sentiments of the Hindoos as regards the Kali Pooja. It is satisfactory to find that the meeting of proprietors of the Bengal Bonded Warehouse announced for Wednesday the 12th has been postponed, the day, as the advertisement says, "being a gazetted holiday."

THE Bengal Government has ruled that no candidate who is already serving under another Government will be allowed to compete in the examination of Deputy Collectorship, unless he obtains the previous permission of that Government. The rule applies to the next March examination.

NOTES, LEADERETTES, AND OUR OWN NEWS.

AT request of Peers, Prelates, members of the House of Commons and leaders of all circles, the Lord Mayor of London has called a meeting to discuss the oppression on the Jews in Russia.

HER Majesty's twin screw cruiser Serpent, being driven out of her course in a storm, foundered on the rocks on Monday night, twenty miles to the north of Cape Finisterre, close to the village of Araminas. There were one hundred and seventy six all told on board at the time. There was no time to lower any boats, and she sank with all hands, except three who were badly injured by the rocks while swimming ashore.

THE prying, punctuating German Doctor, Dr. Koch, is always seeing something or other. He now claims to have discovered a cure for Lupus Tubercular diseases of the glands, bones and joints. He believes that phthisis is curable, but is not confident yet that the cure is final. The Berlin doctors, we are told, favor his pretensions and Berlin surgeons have successfully tried his remedy—the injection of a certain lymph. The lymph hitherto tried has been obtained from Dr. Libbertz of Berlin. The Berlin Government has placed ten thousand pounds at the disposal of Dr. Koch for a hospital for the treatment of the diseases by his method. We expect to hear more by and by.

THE Irrepressible Leitner still holds out, and will hold his own—Congress. An unsatisfactory telegram of the 12th says that the Committee of the Orientalists has fixed London as the place and September next as the time for the meeting of the International Oriental Congress, Dr. Leitner being the Secretary for organising the meeting.

A NEW and unprecedented visitation is approaching India. The Czarevitch is expected during Christmas. Let no body be alarmed. He comes not for the invasion of India, but as a guest of the Queen-Empress. The Great Northern Bearling will need no muzzling, he is in suitable charge, and provided with good leading. The Heir to all the Russias comes as a Prince of Peace. Sir Donald Mackenzie Wallace, Private Secretary to the late Viceroy, accompanies the future Czar as cicerone. The visit, according to Lord Salisbury at the Lord Mayor's Banquet, pregnant with benefit both to Russia and Great Britain, is a pledge of peace. Charming alliteration to be sure. We only hope the averment will prove more correct than Louis Napoleon's epigram, The Empire is Peace. After all, the Premier is right. In such a case it is in the power of a great statesman like him to keep himself right. Peace, according to modern statecraft, is a constant preparedness, it not state, of war.

HAVING rode the high horse through the Doorga Pooja holidays, Lord Lansdowne went into camp. He is still on tour. He is as gaily received by the Native Princes as ever, as by Native custom and by duty bound. The reception throughout has been loyal and there is no complaint of any omission. The Viceregal utterances have not as yet been peculiarly noteworthy.

IN the Shikarpur defanation case, the Sadr Court has rectified the cruelty of the two lower Courts on the editor of the Phoenix. We congratulate Baboo Nogendranath Gupta on the remission of the sentence of imprisonment on him.

THE order of Mr. Kennedy in the Warburton prosecution of the Tribune has been assailed from both sides. Neither the prosecutor nor the accused were satisfied. They all applied for reversal of the order. The arguments have been heard by the Divisional Judge of Lahore who has reserved his decision. Mr. Warburton has let off Mr. Buchanan by extracting an apology of his own dictation. The poor Baboo was reserved for vengeance.

GENERAL Chesney's term as Military Member expires in June next. But he retires, we believe, in March. He is not likely to go back to Simla, having broken up his camp there permanently. He has made some presents of his books to the Military Department. We hope they will be of more use to Government.

THE Maharaja of Cooch Behar is best at his entertainments and brilliant at polo. There was a match at Meerut on the 14th. The Maharaja of Patiala's team played against the Meerut Station. The former was composed of the Maharajas of Patiala and Cooch Behar, General Goordik Sing and Patiala's Private Secretary. Captains Watkins, Young, Kitson and King composed the Station. It was a fast and well contested game, the Maharaja of Cooch Behar shining most as back for his side. Ultimately, the Patiala team beat the Station by two goals to one.

AT a meeting of the London Association of Correctors of the Press, Mr. E. Cottam, discoursing on "The Reading boy and his Education," pointed out as defects in the training of boys in the London Board Schools, that "it was impossible under the present system for a boy even to read fluently or intelligibly, and that writing was a lost art." We may say the evils have voyaged unto India. Here, moreover, the pronunciation is unEnglish, the words are wrongly accentuated and misspelt. Both the courses of study in our schools and colleges and the system of University examinations loudly call for change. The country is so lost in the University, that there is not a place in Calcutta for education of a higher course for a student not succeeding in the Entrance examination, and yet the University certificates and diplomas are by themselves no test of merit or passports to public or private service.

MORPHIA and strychnine lozenges have run out their day in America. Quinine is recovering ground. The fashionable restorative now is that alkaloid, usually administered in the form of pills. Every American lady—of ton—is armed with an ornamental cut-glass bottle with a gold stopper containing the pills. When tired, she takes two pills; when in a draught, one; four or five pills allay her hunger, and the number for wet feet is ten. Six are a cure for indigestion. Two grains of quinine enter into the composition of each pill.

The change is from the frying pan to the fire. Begging Mr. Ram Chandra Bose's pardon, the Yankee gal is a colourless delicacy not famous for vitality. She has long since injured her teeth from the national fondness for Western khajá, gajá and peragi. Poppy and Nux Vomica latterly undermined her constitution. The finishing will be given by the slow poison of the South American Bark—with the loss of her eyes and ears.

THE parting Lieutenant-Governor has recorded a splendid éloge—the inspiration of the friendly muse of the Hon'ble H. J. S. Cotton—on the retired Chairman of the Calcutta Corporation. The Resolution on the administration report of the municipality for the year 1889-90 concludes thus:—

"The Lieutenant-Governor cannot conclude this Resolution without expressing his high appreciation of the services which have been rendered to the City of Calcutta by the late Chairman, Sir Henry Harrison. For nine years he was Chairman of the Corporation, and the successful administration of the affairs of the Municipality during this long period, the firm financial credit of the Commissioners, the innumerable sanitary reforms effected, especially the extension of the water-supply and the conservancy of bustees, the increase in material prosperity in the city which in consequence of these reforms has shown itself in so marked a degree that the value of land in Calcutta generally may be said to have doubled, the reorganization and reconstruction of nearly every department of work, the hearty zeal and co-operation with which the Commissioners as a body now unite with the Executive to advance the welfare of the city,—an attitude for which they were not always distinguished, but which is in itself the best testimony to the capacity of a Chairman,—the methodical and systematic development of civic administration in all departments, are a sufficient and lasting tribute to the manner in which Sir Henry Harrison has discharged the duties of his responsible, difficult, and thankless office. His name will always be honourably associated with the growth of municipal institutions in the Metropolis."

The accuracy of that statement will not, we believe, be disputed by any man of candour and generosity, by any but a hostile critic. It may not be the whole truth, but no Lieutenant-Governor, in the absence of special information, can possibly suspect if a screw is loose somewhere or if the Chair is too kind to subordinates for perfect discipline or adequate efficiency. It is certainly fortunate for Sir Henry Harrison's permanent reputation, that there had been a change in the head of the Local Government before he came to leave the administration of the town. Sir Rivers Thompson could scarcely have been so liberal in commendation. He would have qualified. He would have been bound to remember his own sanitary Commission on the Corporation, of which Commission Mr. Cotton himself was a member. The whole resolution is redolent of the two heroes who saved the Municipality and the cause of Local Self-Government in Calcutta. If Sir Henry Harrison himself were the Lieutenant-Governor or the Secretary in the Bengal Financial Department, he would not write less. Every point of the report which could possibly be construed against the views of Sir Henry, has been taken up and disposed of to his credit. So, after all, his Chairmanship has not proved a "thankless office."

THE Resolution of Government on Sir Alfred Croft's last education report clearly and strongly approves a principle in regard to the expansion of primary education which we have advocated from the first. A great deal of waste of public money has already taken place in pursuance of what for brevity may be called a policy of show, and it were high time to retrace steps towards real progress. It affords us great satisfaction, therefore, to observe that the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal has now distinctly directed, on Sir Alfred Croft's recommendation, that the consolidation, rather than an unlimited extension of the primary system should henceforth be kept in view. The Director has justly raised the question whether there is any good derived from the expenditure of money on ephemeral schools, which make no appreciable impression on the ignorance of the rural population and which used to be started up by way of a response to an eager demand on the part of departmental subordinates for mere numbers, irrespective of other considerations. The Government Resolution compliments the Director for having raised the question opportunely, but we fear the foolish system of making numbers the test of progress has been allowed to continue far too long. It was under a reaction against higher education that the fiat went forth to multiply primary schools as fast as possible, and large funds were directed to be spent for the purpose. The Department of Education was rather too compliant in carrying out the new policy, the mistake of which has at last been found out.

MR. Toynbee, in his last report on the Burdwan Division, says very truly that "the position of an official Chairman of a Municipality is altogether a stronger and more popular one than that of a non-official. The latter's every act is regarded with distrust and suspicion; parties are formed to thwart his measures and question his executive action, and his position is by no means a bed of roses." He is satisfied, however, with the working of Local Self-Government upon the whole, and mentions the names of Baboo Lolit Mohun Sing, Vice-Chairman of the Hooghly District Board, of Baboo Siva Naryan Mookerjee, Chairman of the Uttarparah Municipality, of Baboo Nalinaksha Basu, Chairman of the Burdwan Municipality and Vice-Chairman of the District Board, and of Baboo Ishan Chunder Mitter, Chairman of the Hooghly Municipality, as deserving to be specially brought forward in this connection.

THE Presidency Division Commissioner also speaks fairly well of the working of Local Self-Government. He has also a kind word for our Ratepayers' Associations which "display considerable activity in criticising the proceedings of Municipal Commissioners, their Chairmen, and Vice-Chairmen, and serve as a check upon irregular proceedings and extravagant expenditure of public money."

WE are glad to find the Maharajkumar of Nuddea, who took over his estate from the Court of Wards last year, is reported by Mr. Smith to be taking great personal interest in its management. The Raja of Naldanga is the only landlord in Jessore highly spoken of. In Moorshedabad, the Nawab Bahadoor and the Maharani Surnomoyi and other Zemindars distinguished themselves by their liberality during the distress.

In his last administration report of Central India, Mr. Henvey pays off his critics in the press on a subject which has made much noise. The young Maharaja of Gwalior, he writes,

"is being brought up under a system which aims at combining the best of home influences, viz., the care and solicitude of the boy's mother, with the advantage of English teaching in the hours devoted to study. The spirit of the wishes which the dying Maharaja Scindhia is said to have expressed is faithfully respected. No one dreams of anglicising the Maharaja or of drawing him away from his mother and native friends, or of moulding him into the modern fashion of the social and sporting Chief; but he will nevertheless receive the education of a gentleman."

This hardly mends matters. At any rate, the explanation is dubious. Much will depend upon the interpretation one puts upon the word gentleman. And still more on the distinction between the spirit and the letter of the dying Maharaja's wishes. Indeed, the animus of Aboo is apparent from the doubt sought to be put on the dying Scindhia's views. There cannot be a shadow of doubt on the subject. It was no wish merely but absolute request of the dying Prince to the British Government.

Mr. Henvey is more severe in his reply to the public criticisms of the investment of a portion of the Gwalior hoards. He says:—

"The finances of this important State are in a flourishing condition. The accounts submitted by the Durbar are not printed, because they would be unintelligible to any one who is not acquainted with local terms and with the Marhatta method of book-keeping. The general result, however, is that, besides over 5 crores of rupees invested, Gwalior possessed, at the close of the Gwalior year ending June 1889, a cash balance of 4 crores and 30 lakhs in the various treasuries, and a working annual surplus of 20 lakhs, or considerably more than the whole revenue of Rewa. The disclosure of these facts is enough to demonstrate the folly of those critics who have endeavoured to persuade an ignorant public that the British Government has squandered the treasure of a State confided by a dying friend to its fostering care. The truth is that the interest on loans suffices, and even more than suffices, to cover the whole cost of the roads, bridges, jails, barracks, stately memorials, and other public works which Mr. Harris has so successfully planned and executed at Lashkar and elsewhere, and the Council are free to lay out all that can be reasonably expended upon other requirements of the country, while adding a vast sum yearly to the Maharaja's hoards. No honest objection to this is conceivable, except by those who hold that the prosperity of a State is measured by the quantity of its coin lying uselessly buried in nooks and corners of the palace. A well-intentioned adviser would rather encourage the Durbar to diminish still further these unproductive hoards and to invest money in some undertaking of great utility, such as a State Railway, which should both bring profit to the country and serve as a lasting monument of the Maharaja's minority."

Mr. Henvey speaks highly of the firmness of the late Maharaja Tukaj-Rao Holkar, and illustrates it by his successful action in the capture of Tantia Bhil. He says:—

"As an instance of the vigour of His Highness's action when his mind is made up, I may note the capture of the celebrated free-booter Tantia Bhil. This capture was effected, as every one knows, by a joint expedition organised, equipped, and sent out at Maharaja Holkar's request. But it is not so generally known that the Indore Durbar had led up to this crowning exploit by a series of well-planned measures all tending to the isolation of Tantia and to the diminution of his prestige in Indore territory. His family were removed from the border; his patrons were arrested and punished; and a powerful personage, whose influence extended over the region frequented by the outlaw, was sent into temporary exile. I must not forget, however, while giving the fullest credit and the greatest honour to the Durbar, to mention those by whom the capture was actually accomplished. The lance-shaft was Maharaja Holkar's, but the steel point was furnished by Sardar Bahadur Ishri Parshad and his gallant comrades of the Central India Horse and Bhopal Battalion, whose services have been cordially acknowledged."

Shortly after the close of the year under review the Darbar's men and the Khandwa Police succeeded in killing Bondria, who was Tanti's most formidable lieutenant, and in utterly dispersing his gang. This is another point scored by the Maharaja, and he has only to stamp out dacoity and cattle-lifting in Malwa in co-operation with Gwalior and other States in order to win for himself the reputation of being one of the most enterprising Chiefs in Central India."

THE following notice of Bhopal from Mr. Henvey's pen will be read with interest:—

"Bhopal has been tranquil since December 1888, when the administration was changed, but the death of the Begum's husband, Maulvi Sadik Hassan, was a grievous blow to Her Highness. The ruler of this State, though still living behind the veil, takes a keen interest in public affairs, and she is ever ready to give ear to friendly advice. Her Minister, Munshi Imtiyaz Ali, is doing his best to introduce needful reforms. He is confronted by many difficulties in his efforts to revise the assessment of land revenue, which is well known to press heavily, for Bhopal is no exception to the rule that under the lax and slipshod system of revenue administration, which in Native States is carried on chiefly through mustajirs or contracting lessees, no regular and trustworthy record of data exists from which a sound conclusion regarding the proper share of the State can be arrived at. It will probably be found that a rough and summary revision, coupled with training indigenous agency to keep fairly accurate registers of cultivation and rent is all that can be at present attempted with tolerable prospect of success."

HERE is the latest journalistic joke—against the butt of newspaper proprietors' envy. The Star professed to have received, one of these mornings, the following, neatly printed on a card of subdued colour:—

"Died of the Rickets, Sept. 13, after a lingering illness, Master London Edition of the New York Herald, Aged 20 Months, the third newspaper offspring of James Gordon Bennett, Esq. Notwithstanding the scientific exertions of those experienced Press Physicians, Doctors L. J. Jennings, M.P., and Joseph Hatton, who had been in attendance night and day, the Child passed away peacefully."

A vigorous paterfamilias with a prosperous progeny may afford the occasional loss of a brat, so long as his bullion-harvesting boy is hale and hearty.

It is a pity the men of the press have no loyalty to the Prince of their order.

THE modern aphorism has it, History repeats itself. And well that it does so, or else the world would have been distinctly poorer: we would not have got the Father and King of biographers. It was Plutarch that introduced the literary custom of comparison between the different great men of antiquity. Since then, every great man, in whatever department, has been weighed in the balance against another, who, in his career and qualities and defects, has approximated nearest to him. The importance of the method discovered by the learned Theban—using the term without reproach—may be recognised when we remember that this Comparative Biography has descended from authors down to the debating societies of young men. We are not disposed to believe in unique Sultanic greatness. The test of greatness is to have a parallel.

The star of Lord Wolesey is still in the ascendant. He has found—or they have found for him—his historical "double." The Army and Navy Gazette writes as follows:—

"In some of the best points of his very marked character Lord Peterborough, of whom, by-the-bye, our old friend and whilom contributor, Colonel Russell, of Aden, Military Attaché at Berlin, lately wrote a 'Life' of great merit, was prototype of Viscount Wolesey. His energy was irresistible, his versatility amazing, his industry unconquerable; he was gallant, courtly, ambitious—a writer—a soldier—bold and able in the field and cautious in council. He was successful in many great enterprises. Finally, he made enemies. The 'inviter comes virtutis' was fully his. Peterborough was not unlucky enough to have to reorganise a War Office, or to battle with a Secretary of State over matters which he understood, and the latter did not; and he was lucky enough not to have his speeches taken down in shorthand on the spot and printed a moment after they were spoken, and not to have written 'A Soldier's Pocket-Book.' But Peterborough would have been regarded at the War Office, had it been running on the lines of to-day, as a very troublesome fellow, and his departure from it would have been accepted without weeping and gnashing of teeth in the inner chambers. Indeed, it is whispered that, although there was always an entente cordiale of manner and pleasant social relations with the powers that be therein, Lord Wolesey's exodus from Pall Mall did not occasion any immediate order for sackcloth and ashes in high places."

Whether the greatest general in England will be thankful for comparison with the hero who had seen more kings and more postillions than any man in Europe, we do not know. The true parallel of Wolesey seems to us to be our Indian celebrity, the victor of Meanee, soldier, administrator, diplomat, and author—an able startegist, a dashing warrior, a trenchant pamphleteer—thoroughly conscious of his merits and value and cursed with a wonderful capacity for making enemies—and yet, take him all in all, a character such as we shall not see the like of soon unless we see in Wolesey.

HERE, from the same source, is a notice of a formidable German invasion of England:—

"Bessemer! Siemens! Krupp! Gruson! Schneider! Abel! these are great names in the world of steel, iron, guns, plates, and military dynamics! They are none of them English. Although we are fond of claiming for ourselves supremacy in metallurgy, it is a fact that we have, in our manufacture of iron and steel, largely profited by the labours of foreigners—Germans, Swedes, &c. Now it is reported that the Germans, favoured by the fostering genius of Free-trade, are establishing themselves as makers of guns and military matériel in England."

What a commentary on the Indian Humiliation decree called the Arms Act! Foreigners may manufacture military arms and ammunition. Thanks to the liberality of British polity, the standing or historic enemies of England may make any number of guns and grow rich by supplying them against her. But alas for India and the Indians! In this country, England is the veritable successor of the Great Mogul, and her Indian subjects are not allowed to protect themselves from highway men and burglars and the beasts of the forest, with the paltriest sword or a rusty pistol! We wish our powerful London contemporary might realise the grim absurdity of it all.

THE Army and Navy Gazette is decidedly wiser in its generation than many of the leading purely political organs. Here is a passage from it pregnant with meaning and with sound patriotic counsel:—

"All other countries in the world, as far as we know, watch over the interests of their native industries—agricultural, manufacturing, mineral—with protective care, but England lets them take care of themselves. Our Government act on a different principle—they buy wherever they can get what they want, and do not care how or where it is made. We read that gentlemen representing the War Office, the Admiralty, the Board of Trade, &c., went off by special train to see and admire the works and processes of Messrs. Mannesmann and Siemens at Swansea, and it seems the most natural thing in the world to give them encouragement. But it would be astonishing if France, Germany, Italy, or the United States followed our example in the like case, and we only hope our iron and steel industries will prosper till that good time comes."

Political Economy is a good thing, but there is a disposition in many quarters to make too much of it. As a British science, the British may well be proud of it. But surely they ought not to elect to suffer by it. There is use as well as abuse of it, as of any other thing, and it is the abuse that we complain of. There are fallacies of Free Trade as well as of Protection. In escaping from the terrors of a foolish restriction, England has plunged into absolute recklessness. It is her geography and her supremacy at sea that postpone for her the day of retribution.

IN the triennial report of Charitable Dispensaries in Bengal, Dr. Hilson traces the comparatively small number of in-door patients to the Indian's innate aversion to hospital. He says:—

"The native of India, when sick, prefers to be treated at his own house, and at such a time will not leave his family if it can possibly be avoided—a characteristic which seems to be more strongly marked in Bengal than elsewhere. The desire is only natural, and he cannot be blamed for it; but it seems to me that one cause of it is to be found in the very limited provision of separate accommodation for the families of patients at dispensaries, and this is a point well worth the attention of Municipal Committees and others interested in these institutions. In the Punjab and North-Western Provinces many of the dispensaries have a few rooms apart from the main building, which are reserved for the accommodation of well-to-do patients and those who bring relatives with them, and they are largely taken advantage of."

His remarks on the virulence of the Bengal malarial fever cannot be read by the lay reader without a shudder:—

"Malarial fevers are not more common in Bengal than in other Indian provinces, but they have this peculiarity that they are usually of a more severe and fatal type, which is probably due to the damp, relaxing nature of the climate. They leave their traces behind in the form of anæmia, enlarged spleen, diarrhoea, and dysentery, and it has truly been said that if the prevalence of malarial fever could be abolished one-half the diseases of the country would disappear with them."

It is gratifying to have Dr. Hilson's favourable testimony as to the interest taken by Municipalities and District Boards in these charitable institutions. The contributions by municipalities and subscriptions from native gentlemen form the chief resources for their maintenance.

A VENERABLE patriarch has passed away in Baboo Shib Chunder Deb. Born in 1811, he was close upon 80 when he breathed his last on the morning of Wednesday last. Always of a slim figure, he lived on spare diet and kept regular hours and was active till the last. He had always work to do, never idling himself. He held Government service for 30 years, commencing as an assistant in the Surveyor-General's Office and ending as a Deputy Collector. He retired in 1863 and drew about a lac and 10 thousand rupees as pension. His father was a pensioner of rupees five only, but longer lived than the son by a decade. He was of the first batch of students who drew their inspiration for after life from DeRozio. Baboos Russick Krishna Mullick and Radhanath Sikdar and the Revd. K. M. Banerjee have all passed away. They are now followed by Baboo Shib Chunder Deb. The only one of the lot survives in Baboo Ramtanoo Lahiri. An unostentatious man, he was not unmindful of his duties to others. His life was devoted to good works. He made his own Connaghar. He found it an insignificant village of the Kuyasth Bhadracracy, and he leaves it a respectable and most interesting municipal township. Its institutions are all of his making—products not only of his brain and energy but in a good measure also of his purse. He founded a school for boys, another for girls, a dispensary, a library and a Brahmosomaj. A man of strict habits as of principles, Baboo Shib Chunder Deb will be long remembered by his friends and large circle of relatives. His loss will be especially felt by the Sadharan Brahmo Somaj, of which he was a pillar. A man who had never had a quarrel and who had never sworn at a servant, was invaluable as a peace-maker among a sect distinguished above all others for its liability to schisms.

A MARRIED Hindu girl of eighteen along with her father turned Mahomedan and took a second husband of her new persuasion. The girl was charged with bigamy and the father with abetment. Moulvi Abdool Jubber, the Deputy Magistrate of Alipore, has committed both to the Sessions. The Magistrate held that although the second marriage was valid under the Mahomedan law, the first marriage under the Hindu law survives, for the Bombay High Court—Justices Pinhey and Melville—have held that a Hindu marriage cannot be dissolved even if the husband or wife turns a Christian or a Mahomedan.

LET the foreign rowdies beware! Our boys too are becoming rowdily disposed, and by and bye they will give a good account of any unmannerly curs who try their temper too sorely.

There was lately an incident of American backwoods judicature in one of our quiet Bengal courts. The scene was in the interesting little town of Monghyr, of historic fame, at the court of the senior Deputy Magistrate, Baboo Khagendra Nath Mitter. While Mr. Palit, Jr., barrister, was addressing the court against an accused, he appears to have suffered interruption from the Pleader for the defence, Baboo Prosonno C. Mitter. He showed his irritation after the grand manner of the barristers in the High Court towards the native attorneys, by pelting him with a book. The Pleader's Krishnaghur blood was up at this public insult, and he sprang upon his assailant. Seizing him as a rain by the beard, he dismissed him with a kicking. The scene that ensued may be imagined. The Magistrate was in every way equal to the occasion. After restoring order, he made a proceeding of the incident and, after taking the depositions of the belligerents, he charged them with contempt. The Pleader was tried by the second Deputy and fined Rs. 25. The European District Magistrate himself tried Mr. Palit and fined him Rs. 500. We wonder he did not order him the historic punishment of being dropped from a tower of the fort—or, in the absence of any suitable tower in these days, from the roof of Ram Persad's Ghat—to the river!

Mysterious are the ways of Providence! The poor solicitors and solicitors' clerks are avenged for their injuries from the barristers in Calcutta by Pleaders on barristerlings in the country!

THE COMING GENERAL ELECTION IN MUNICIPAL BENGAL.

IN a short time hence, there will be the tumult and bustle of another general election in the Municipalities of Bengal. The preliminaries are being arranged by the district officials, and, by the time they are ready, the tug of canvassing will have commenced. From the outset, we have taken a warm interest in the movement. We expected a good deal from Local Self-Government. We thought it was time enough that people should be left to manage their own village affairs without the immediate guidance of officials. Our experience, however, of the operation of the system has somewhat shaken our faith. It has not, indeed, disappointed us, but it has not quite fulfilled our expectation. Many were the passages at arms we exchanged with Mr. Monro, then Commissioner of the Presidency Division, for his determined opposition to this measure. The then Governor of Bombay, Sir James Fergusson, incurred no small public odium for a similar attitude. But time is a great healer of differences, and we now find that they had taken a far more correct view of the scheme of election than ourselves. Not that we had not anticipated the outbreak of party-feeling and even a certain deterioration of administrative efficiency—the two chief evils which have attended the introduction of Local Self-Government. We were quite prepared for these effects, and we thought they were an inevitable price which must be paid for any noviciate in political training. As regards the first, we had hoped that party-warfare would soon blow over, and it seems we were not far wrong in this view. Already, there are indications of a lull after the storm—a gradual subsidence of party-spirit, or at any rate the disappearance of it in its active and aggressive aspect. As to administrative effects, judging from official reports, the municipalities under the un-official régime show a fair record of progress. Judged more closely, a palpable falling off in efficiency will probably be detected in some respects, but this may be hoped to rectify itself in time like the first outburst of party-spirit. We are nevertheless far from satisfied, on the whole, and our reasons are, briefly stated, that neither the elections by the people nor the nominations by the Government appear to have succeeded in finding out the right sort of persons—we won't say in all cases, for that is expecting too much from any system—but in a fairly reasonable proportion of cases.

Some of the incidents which attend these Municipal elections are ridiculous in all conscience. Votes are given for persons whom the voters do not know by sight or even by name. At the Cossipore-Chitpore elections, there were workmen-voters brought up before the polling officer who could not say for whom they voted, but it was some Sahib whom they did not know. Electors of this class have been known at other places to give their votes to some Baboo of whom they had never heard. What is perhaps more serious, the votes of even more respectable people are given under an express or implied stipulation that their municipal taxes should be reduced when the returned candidates come into power. That elections under such circumstances should have resulted in the return of improper persons cannot therefore be at all surprising. The elections are already regarded as a farce, and not much interest is taken in them by the people generally. If there is nevertheless a fair muster of voters at the elections, it is due to the exertions of the candidates themselves or of party leaders rather than to any genuine interest in the electors themselves. A good proportion of them who might well attend, keep away from the farce. Elections conducted under such circumstances must result in the return of a bad lot, but the evil of this might be somewhat mitigated, if not completely removed, by the nominations being made by Government with care and knowledge. But nominations to the Municipal Commission are no whit better. We do not quite see how this latter evil can be prevented. The District Magistrate who makes the nominations is naturally guided by the opinions of the Municipal Chairman for the time being, who, in his turn, naturally selects from his own party. Men selected chiefly on the score of their partizanship may turn out good men and true, but the chances in a majority of cases are the reverse. They lie under a more direct stipulation to support the man or the party they owe their appointments to, than the elected candidates to the voters. Altogether, there is little honesty possible under such a system, and, with honesty at such a considerable discount, no administration can inspire public confidence. The subject has various aspects, and we shall return to it at some future occasion.

SIR WILLIAM HUNTER ON HINDU MARRIAGE REFORM.

Sir W. W. Hunter is sure to prove a powerful ally to the Hindu marriage reform cause. Brilliant, indeed, is the array of friends whom Mr. Malabari has interested in behalf of his movement in England, but mere English support is not all that is required to arrive at a settlement of the question satisfactory to all parties. On the contrary, as we said lately, English support had its advantage as well as its disadvantage, and our view is corroborated by Dr. Hunter himself, whose letter in the Times is perhaps the ablest presentation of the subject that we have had for some time. After describing graphically the large measure of sympathy which has been aroused among all classes and sections of the English people for the reforms advocated by Mr. Malabari, and complimenting him for the devotion with which he has worked in the cause, Sir W. W. Hunter says: "So influential an expression of opinion in England must re-act powerfully upon the Government of India. There is no danger that the question will be neglected. The real danger is lest the weight of English public opinion should be used by the more extreme party of Indian reformers to force the hand of the Government and to substitute sensational action for deliberate and well-matured deliberation." While Dr. Hunter is clearly of opinion that legislation is called for to mitigate the evils of the system of infant marriage and enforced penitential widowhood, he deprecates English agitation on the subject. "The conditions of family life and the religious conceptions of paternal responsibility among the Hindoos differ so widely from those to which we are accustomed in this country, that an English movement initiated with an imperfect appreciation of those conditions and religious conceptions is likely to stir up an organised opposition in India which might seriously hamper the action of the Government and throw back the cause of domestic reform even among the most highly educated and enlightened classes." The reform must be left to the initiation of the Indian Government who have never lost sight of it.

Sir W. W. Hunter expresses a decided opinion that the time for legislative action on the subject has now arrived, and considers the proposed reform a just, moderate and necessary one. He does not state the grounds on which he has now come to such an opinion, and with all one's sympathy with the reform itself, one cannot fail to be struck with the fact that a short time ago the tendency of Indian official opinion was contrary to the one now so emphatically declared by an ex-Indian minister. The result of the enquiry into the subject initiated by Lord Dufferin was, as he himself states in his letter, that nine out of the ten Provincial Governments consulted found themselves compelled to report against official interference. Nor was this due to any want of sympathy with the reform on the part of the dissentient Governments. Dr. Hunter himself admits that the evidence did not at that time allow the Provincial Governments to come to any other conclusion. It is a pity he should omit to refer to the new evidence which he has since obtained and which justifies his present change of opinion.

The Hindu marriage system is then described. The origin of it is laid in the times of foreign invasion and internecine war which characterised the history of India before the advent of British rule. During this period of insecurity and anarchy, the supreme need of Hindu women was not independence but safety, and, according to Sir W. W. Hunter, it was "to meet this supreme need, the Hindu marriage system was developed into a powerfully constructed organization of protection—a system which endeavoured to give the maximum security to Hindu women as a whole, and which deliberately acted on the principle that their general safety must be ensured, even at the cost of hardship to individuals among them." This system arising thus out of historical expediency soon acquired a sacramental character and subsequently came to be enforced by the Hindu law. The concluding paragraph of the first of Sir W. W. Hunter's letters shows the spirit of caution with which he approaches the problem of reform:—

"Such is the Hindoo marriage system—a strongly constructed organization of female protection and female obligation resting on the threefold foundation of historical expediency, Divine ordinance, and human law. But to a large section of educated Hindoos, it is now becoming apparent that such a system of enforced protection, however useful it may have been in past periods of invasion and rapine, has ceased to be in accord with the facts of modern life in India. They perceive that the compulsory protection of woman as a sex means the compulsory submission of women as individuals. 'Good and evil, we know in the field of this world,' says Milton, 'grow up together almost inseparably.' Serious-minded Hindoos are asking themselves whether under the altered circumstances of our times, the evils incident to their marriage system are not beginning to preponderate over the benefits. How to secure for their wives and daughters the old safety of dependence with a larger measure of the freedom of modern independence, and how to effect the transition with the least disruption of religious tradition and of family life—this is the fundamental problem of Indian domestic reform."

Dr. Hunter has since followed up his present communication with two others in which he has set forth a practical scheme for giving effect to the reform. While at one with the reform-party as to the need of legislative interference, he does not, like them, regard the case as analogous to that of Suttee, or of infanticide. These he declares as false and misleading analogies, the use of which is likely to do more harm than good to the cause. He would proceed, it is true, with this reform on the same principle as earlier English rulers did with regard to infanticide and Suttee. That principle was to harmonise their original pledges to the people of religious non-interference with the dictates of justice and humanity, by applying a rule of interpretation to those pledges. Acting on this rule, it was held that there was a limit to this non-interference imposed by the supreme duty of every Government to protect the lives of its subjects, and infanticide was accordingly declared to be murder, and the conducting or abetment of Suttee as culpable homicide. Dr. Hunter now asks the rule of interpretation to be further extended, so as to include domestic practices like infant marriage and enforced penitential widowhood which interfere with the health or freedom of action of a subject. The Government has in the past exercised this right of interference with established customs or practices on the ground of their being destructive, not of the lives but, of the freedom or well-being of its subjects, and what is now claimed is that a further step should be taken in the same direction.

Sir W. W. Hunter's first letter is a historical exposition of the burning subject of the day. His second and third letters have since appeared. The more the merrier. The views of a scholar of his Indian knowledge and experience must always command respect. He has made Indian antiquities and sociology his especial study, and is entitled to speak with authority on the subject in question. His authority rests on another ground. A sober and thoughtful enquirer, he is singularly free from the crotchets and eccentricities of irresponsible scholarship, and withal, his sympathies for the people of this country have always won his utterances on Indian questions a respectful hearing. In his second letter, Dr. Hunter discusses the proposals of the Indian party of reform. Those proposals are—1st, to raise the age of consent to 12 years, 2ndly, abolition of the action at law known as the suit for the restitution of conjugal rights, 3rdly, legislative provision to enable infant marriages being repudiated unless ratified by consent within a reasonable time of proper age, and 4thly, the removal of legal obstacles to remarriage of Hindoo widows. He strongly approves of the first two proposals as well as the fourth, but has equally strong objections to the third. We reserve consideration of his last letter in which he proposes what he calls the true remedies.

MORAL OF THE HOLIDAY QUESTION.

SIR,—There are many incomplete and unsymmetrical characters in the British rule, rich in diverse elements of apathy and race-feeling. No selfishness, no vanity, no mere vulgar ambition can sanctify proud consciousness of power or most high-handed dogmatism; and in any case when we have to enshrine the memory of our rulers, we should realize an honest and magnanimous nature, swayed by a glowing earnestness for, and a passionate conviction of, the weal of the subjects. In the Holiday Question, there are two voices, the one applaudive, because intrinsic, the other denunciatory, because extrinsic. It is necessary to gather up the result, not indeed to pitch voice against voice, which would be simply useless, but to sift as clearly as possible the strain of truth from them and set before the public the question in as broad a light of fact and reason as the nature of it warrants. The curtailment of the Doorga Pooja Holidays, apart from its grotesque form in kindling feelings of gloom and despond, cramps and fetters the Hindoo mind in the avoidance of a sacred religious trust that was rivetted on our rulers. The trust as it was, was involved in a pledge of neutrality in matters of religion; but time, the archenemy, shakes it all. The historic lustre is carried away and the charm gone! Well may Providence repeat itself in regenerating New India, filled with prolific brains too mercurial in their workings. Well may the nineteenth century descendant of the old Saxon with the accumulated erudition and heightened sensibility of his national lore, admire the pride of his position, the subtlety of his reasoning, the glory of his diplomatic skill, as he condemns those who follow their own accredited and accepted ideal. Well may the long-limbed, the ponderous-shouldered, the firmly-articulated, the large-handed specimen of Naya, gain more, or at least something more distinctive from contact with intellects of a type essentially alien, minds as speculative as his own. But the hour of retribution comes too late to mend, though come it will. In balancing our interests with those of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce or other classes of traders, it is obvious that the latter kicks the beam, because the interests of trade cannot prove superior to the interests of religion. Besides, it is not the Native element that predominates in this case; yet the Natives, or be it said, the Hindoos are doomed to clip an unmitigated enjoyment of 12 days' holiday, while their more fortunate brethren have a full share of merry Christmas. The urgent telegram from the Government of Bengal to your address dated the 20th October shows that the Memorialists should be informed "that the Governor-General in Council is unable to modify previous orders, but will give careful consideration to any representation that specific offices have been unduly kept open contrary to intention of para: 3 of the Government of India's Home Department letter of the 3rd July last." In this paragraph special arrangements should be made in Government offices "by contracting the hours of business, by limiting the work undertaken to what is really urgent, by granting leave to Hindu employes wherever practicable and by utilizing as much as possible the services of their non-Hindu fellow-clerks to minimise the inconvenience which may be felt by those who have hitherto enjoyed close holidays on the days which will in future be open." The consciousness of inconvenience exists in its reality; the work of mortification aggravates the burden of toil. Thus the inconvenience, far from being minimised, is carried to its highest strain. Nor is this all. The poor Hindu clerk is crushed under a crushing conviction that his best privilege is compulsorily taken away from him, not for any unavoidable cause that affects all Indians as subjects, but because the poor down-trodden Natives, signifying of course Hindus, cannot enjoy a privilege, when the uncompromising sentence of Bishop Butler—"Things are as they are and the consequences of them will be as they will be," is surely the right and salutary maxim for both the governors and the governed. Yes, there is an honorable patriotism in endurance which we are bound to maintain in advancing the cause of our better-trained and better-gifted brethren. Further, it should be borne in mind that, while the curtailment-hardship affects not any considerable portion of the Hindu community but only three or four Hindu clerks under the Government of Bengal, (as the memorable paragraph imports), we have simply to have our lips sealed, and, like most men of big thoughts, bear under all outward show of brave and sometimes audacious words,—a saddened and shadowed heart that feels unutterably the mystery of fate. If a group of holidays—a vacation much rather, is a priceless blessing; if its repose is essential to the physical, social and religious welfare of the people; if its quieting, sanctifying influence on the minds of men is universally admitted; if, in these days of intense excitement, when men live at an express rate, when mental and physical activity are carried to their extreme limits, a vacation comes with a Divine influence and brings rest and quietude to millions of the human race, it will not be close firing if we still kept on bolstering up arguments to convince Government of the unreasonableness of a measure rather than boggle at the fiat that has already gone forth. Our Western friends are wont to suppose that the Doorga Pooja season amongst Native traders is the busiest of all seasons in the year, the shops are kept open even in the Pooja days and there is no lack of activity that is due to religious obstruction, so that the curtailment of the holidays cannot affect our religious interests. It is a Pig Philosophy that argues in this strain. While the night apparently equalises the circulation, it is not sufficient to restore its balance for the attainment of a long life; hence one day in seven, by the bounty of Providence, is thrown in as a day of compensation to perfect, by its repose, the animal system. Physiologically considered, power saved is power gained, and the waste of power from every kind of excitement defeats the purpose of the day. In the present instance, the reduction of 12 days to 4, destroys not only the religious but the physiological effect, and there is no saving nor gaining power. On the other hand, there is a considerable waste of power from the unmitigated enjoyment from the Suttee to virtually the Lukkipooja day, making in all 10 days, although 4 are "strictly religiously observed" to use the words of the redoubtable Nayaratna. Hence, grandest as the festival is of all others of us Hindoos, 4 days' rest can be no more than a meagre blessing conceded to us at all. Those who think otherwise and argue otherwise, say nothing with a higher feeling, so that their arguments, if arguments they can be called, are boxed up in false logic. The Christians believing in the authority of their Lord's day as a religious institution, desire, in fact, the recognition of that authority by others who are not Christians. Thus the Christian holidays signally experienced in our country, have a charm to one and all in various aspects; and while I would anxiously desire that the non-Christians should intelligently appreciate the Christian day of rest, I would at the same time urge with reason and common sense that our Christian friends should preserve the religious and moral character of a festival that intimately concerns a wide class of Indian subjects. Toleration is not a phantom but a reality. It is the blessed outcome of a civilized Government, suiting the fancies not of a "microscopic minority" but the beliefs, the usages of a pre-historic race. Talk of the Red Indians, the Africans, the Australians, whose religions are probably as old as their languages, and so—excuse the adjective—as old as our own language. But we know nothing of their antecedents, nothing but the mere surface of to-day, and that immense surface explored in a few isolated spots only, and often by men utterly incapable of understanding the language and thoughts of the people. And yet we are asked to believe by the followers of the Theoretic School that this mere surface detritus is in reality the granite that underlies all the religions of the ancient world, more primitive than the Veda, more intelligible perhaps than the Old Testament, more instructive than the mythological language of Greece and Rome. It may be so. The religious map of the world may show as violent convulsions as the geological map of the earth. All I say to the enthusiastic believers in this contorted evolution of religious thought is to wait till they know a little more of Hottentots and Papuans. In the meantime, what does the Nayaratna and his school say of Ancient India? Are the Vedas to be classed with the Legends of the Eskimos? Is the Gita other than the Science of Religion and the Science of Thought? Does it contain words and concepts and imaginations that are unintelligible, inexplicable, and irrational? Let the self-styled religious Pundit myrmidon speak. He has sacked the Troy of Hinduism with fancied joy of a crowning victory. It is England's duty to weave her choicest laurels to deck his brow. But before she did it, she should consult the religious interests of the wailing down-trodden Natives. I wish a happier issue next year. The interval brings with it a feeling of suspense. Let India leave the issue to England and to God!

THE DOORGA POOJA HOLIDAYS.

We issued the following Extraordinary on Monday the 20th October last:—

"Today is the seventh of the moon—the first of the four grandest days of the blessed Doorga Pooja! Alas! blessed no more!

This year's Pooja is a Pooja of mourning—thanks to the government of the foreigners who fatten on the trade of our land! This year we are doomed to mingle our tears with the holy waters of the Ganges in our offerings to the Goddess. For the first time since the people of Bengal, of their free instance, invited the British to sovereignty in India, the darkness of disappointment and pain clouds this auspicious Religious Festival. For the first time, the Government has mutilated the leave for the Pooja by one-third. It is not often that the British Government in India in such matters reminds the people of their utter insignificance and abject helplessness in their own land.

Urgent Telegram.

Day 20. Hour. 8. Minute 48. [Oct. 20. 1890.]

From—THE SECRETARY TO THE GOVT. OF BENGAL, Financial Department, Darjeeling.

To—BABOO SAMBHU C. MOOKERJEE,
1, Uckoor Dutt's Lane,
WELLINGTON STREET,
Calcutta.

THE Lieutenant-Governor has received the following telegram from the Government of India dated 18th October.

'No. 2117, Public, your letter (of the 8th instant, on the subject of the Doorga Pooja Holiday. Please inform the Memorialists that the Governor-General in Council is unable to modify previous orders, but will give careful consideration to any representation that specific offices have been unduly kept open contrary to intention of para 3, of the Government of India's Home Department Letter of the 3rd July last.'

THE paragraph referred to in the Government of India's telegram to the Lieutenant-Governor runs as follows:—

'The Governor-General in Council accepts the proposals of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor as regards the offices under the Government of Bengal to be kept open during the holidays which will henceforth not be notified under the Act. In all these offices special arrangements should be made, by contracting the hours of business, by limiting the work undertaken to what is really urgent, by granting leave to Hindu employes wherever practicable, and by utilizing as much as possible the services of their non-Hindu fellow-clerks to minimise the inconvenience which may be felt by those who have hitherto enjoyed close holidays on the days which will in future be open. Under proper arrangements, so far from hardship being entailed on any considerable section of the community, not more than three or four Hindu clerks under the Government of Bengal are likely to be affected by the change. Separate orders to the same effect will be given by the Government of India in regard to the offices directly subordinate to it which are situated in Calcutta.'

SIR,

I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter No. 583T.F. dated the 8th instant, with which you forward a memorial on behalf of the Hindu inhabitants of Calcutta and its Suburbs, praying for a reconsideration of the orders recently passed by the Government of India in the matter of the Doorga Poojah holidays in the Lower Provinces of Bengal.

2. In reply I am to say that the Governor-General in Council regrets that he does not, as at present advised, see any reason for modifying the orders contained in my letter No. 1289, dated the 3rd July last, which were passed after full consideration and with every desire to respect the religious scruples of the Hindu community. I am however to add that the memorialists should be informed that should they hereafter be able to show to the satisfaction of the Government of India, that in any specific instances offices have been unduly kept open or work imposed on Hindu employes, contrary to the intention of para. 3 of the Home Department letter cited above, their representations will not fail to receive careful attention from the Local Government and the Government of India.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

ALBANO.

BY RENNELL RODD.

THE lake lies calm in its mountain cwn,
And the twilight star shows clear,
And large and solemn it gazes down
In the mirror of the mere.
Was it here they rowed in their crazy aft,
Where only the ripples are—
The strange lake folk of the floating raft?
Was it yesterday, said the star.

And the mountain slept, and the nights still,
And thousand years rolled by.
Was there once a city on yon low hill,
With its towers along the sky?
Did the cries of the war din of long ago
Wail over the waters far?
There is no stone left for man to know
Since yesterday, said the star.

And the mountains sleep and the ripples we,
And again a thousand years,
And the tents of battle are by the lake,
And the gleam of the horsemen's spears.
They bend their brows with a fierce surmise
On the lights in the plain afar,
And the battle hunger is in their eyes,
Was it yesterday, said the star.

And a thousand years—and the lake is still,
And the star beams large and white;
The burial chant rolls down the hill,
Where they bury the monk at night;
The mountains sleep and the ripples lave
The shore where the pine woods are;
There is little change but another grave
Since yesterday, said the star.

PRESCIENCE.

THE noontide sun beats fiercely down,
Sweet scent of locust fills the air,
The breezes lag through field and town,
And life has lost its sense of care.

And stretched anear the panting flock
That huddle in the locust shade,
They watch afar the sails that rock
All idly in the track of trade.

The white, white sails that idle lie
They watch, but never seem to see,
Their eyes are full, they sadly sigh,
To-morrow must our parting be.

"To-morrow, love—nay, do not fear,
To-morrow is a word of hope,
And faith will keep your vision clear,
Where love alone would only grope."

Ah, man, your talk but idly rolls,
All words of cheer must idle be:
The prescience of some gentle souls
Is deeper than philosophy.

She hears the drowsy hum of bees
Around them in the locust bloom;
But over all she hears or sees,
There vaguely falls a sense of doom.

"Dear love," she says, tears drown the rest;
He tries to still her vague alarms;
Her head sinks on his loyal breast,
He folds her in his loving arms.

Next morn upon the strand they part;
She hears the languid sea complain;
Ah, maiden, press your aching heart,
You shall not see your love again.

He may not come while ocean rolls:
And so I hold it true to be,
The prescience of some gentle souls
Is deeper than philosophy.

JAMES MACCARTHY.

TO POSTUMUS.

Horace, Book II., Ode 14.

AH, Postumus, my Postumus, the years glide by apace,
Nor love of the immortal gods shall from the human face
Keep back the wrinkles, or avert old age's chilling breath,
Or for an instant stay thy step, indomitable death.
Should you three hundred bulls a year to Pluto dedicate,
You could not hope the tearless king thus to propitiate,
Who holds within the Stygian stream, that takes its course through Hell,
The triple monster Geryon and Tityus as well—
That stream, alas, which all of us who earth's rich bounties share
Must some sad day be ferried o'er, though well or ill we fare;
Whether, in regal purple born, we rule in splendid state,
Or, like the wretched hind, the soil for bread we cultivate.
The cruel god who rules the fate of war we flee in vain,
Or Adria's billows tumbling hoarse upon the stormy main;
In vain the autumn wind we shun, with prescience of death,
That on our feeble bodies pours its pestilential breath.
On black Cocytus we must look, winding in sluggish mood,
With ever-wretched Sisyphus and Danaus' evil brood.
Your broad domains must be resigned, and home and loving wife,
And not a single tree or plant you tended here in life

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being untrue, and likely to cause confusion.

Shall follow to his sepulchre their transitory lord,
Save yonder gloomy cypresses, by living men abhorred.
A worthier heir than you, my friend, your Cæcuban shall drain,
That priceless wine protected by a hundred bolts in vain,
And shall upon his pavement a diviner vintage waste
Than pontiffs at their festivals may ever hope to taste.

NEWS AND OUR COMMENTS.

THE historic French Sepoy Battalion of Pondicherry, which, after a good service of two centuries, was to have been disbanded on the close of December 1890, will, after all, be maintained, for the moment at any rate.

THERE are three Katywar Princes just now at the Cambridge University. All of them, as befits their race, are fond of manly sports. One of them, Ranjit Singh, is an enthusiastic cricketer. He applied to the Nottingham Champion, Mr. Arthur Shrewsbury, for a token of his play during the late season. Mr. Shrewsbury thereupon has presented Kumar Ranjit Singhji with his champion bat suitably inscribed, noting the triumphs of his instrument, and they have exchanged portraits. The ruling passion is not only strong in death but pursues us to the ends of the earth. The Indian's hunt after certificates, which so amuses and sometimes embarrasses Europeans, appears in full integrity in the Rajaling in his distant alma mater.

WE are sorry to see an educated Mahomedan gentleman of promise, belonging to the Statutory Civil Service, in the Small Cause Court for a tradesman's bill of Rs. 794, the more so as he had no case whatever.

ANOTHER native Judge in the South, and he another Malabari, is charged with corruption. Judge Davis of Tanjore has sent to the High Court a petition from a Pleader, named S. A. Sastry, against Mr. Krishna Menon, Subjudge of Tanjore, and suggested an enquiry.

THE Secretary of State has addressed the following despatch to the Governor-General of India on the subject of the duty on silver plate. It is numbered Statistics 45 and dated India Office, London, May 15, 1890:—

"My Lord Marquis,—Your Excellency has learnt by telegraph that it has been decided to abolish the duties on the importation of silver plate into the United Kingdom. The report of the Chancellor of the Exchequer's speech (Hansard's Debates, 17th April 1890, page 721,) shows that Her Majesty's Government remitted the duties in deference to the wishes and interests of the people of India.

2. The question of abolishing the British system of hall-marking and the views of the Indian Government on the matter were also considered. But it was decided not to interfere with the law and practice concerning hall-marking in the United Kingdom. The majority of people interested in the trade and those conversant with the artistic side of the question are believed to be strongly in favour of retaining the system of hall-marking. Her Majesty's Government proposed, however, to mitigate as far as possible any inconvenience under which the Indian silver trade might suffer, by providing that Indian silver work bearing an Indian hall-mark affixed under the authority of your Government should be admitted into the United Kingdom without being subjected to the British hall-mark regulations.

3. The Bill dealing with the matter will be forwarded to Your Excellency as soon as it is introduced. Meanwhile I shall be glad to learn at an early date what standard of fineness your Government would, with due regard to the practice of Indian silversmiths, propose to adopt for the Indian silver hall-mark. I forward (by book-post) a copy of a Parliamentary return showing the standards of fineness adopted by different European nations which maintain a system of hall-marking.

4. It is perhaps needless for me to observe that, if a hall-mark is established for India, it might be permissive and not obligatory. Any dealer who desired to send silver ware to England without being liable to the British hall-marking system would get his wares assayed and marked in India under such rules as Your Excellency might prescribe. I anticipate that the new law and practice in the United Kingdom will follow the practice now existing, whereby artistic silver ware or ware belonging to private persons and not intended for sale is exempted from the hall-mark regulations."

THE convenient cheap match box is not always safe. It should never be allowed to be the toy of children. The other day, a native aged only 3, residing in Barnishpara, Entally, died of burns at Campbell Hospital, from the fire to her clothes from the match she was playing with and igniting, in the absence of her parents. Agony not to be trifled with.

TWO new forms of the violin have been patented—the agilo and the violinetta. The first by Mr. Barnardo has a raised neck of merely nominal length, with five strings tuned in fifths. It is claimed for the last, that it can be mastered by any tyro in a few weeks without any previous knowledge of music. It is much easier to learn than the instrument of which it is an adaptation, and suitable for both sexes.

COMING after the late accident, the last (Nov. 8.) inspection report of the Kidderpore Dock works is of more than ordinary interest. Major M'Arthur, R. E., and Mr. Connan write:—

"Dock No. 1.—The quay wall was completed with the exception of the coping which was in progress. We regret to record that in the beginning of October, or shortly after the expiry of the quarter ending September, to which period the progress herein stated bears reference, a considerable length of the walls of this Dock suddenly showed signs of failure. We understand that the matter has already been reported to Government, and that more detailed report is in course of preparation, which will be submitted in due course. As far as we could note during our inspection, the following is the present condition of the damaged work, the same being roughly indicated on the diagram accompanying the progress report and submitted herewith.

Movement of the long straight length of the east wall of the Dock has taken place over 2,050 feet, commencing about 50 feet from the angle of the short berth at the north end and extending to the angle of the wall at the south end. The displacement at the extremities of this length is shown by slight cracks on the face of the masonry extending through the wall and by longitudinal cracks along the course of the tunnel arch; but it is not considered that the latter extend through the solid masonry. The wall has been thrust forward by the earth backing, and tilted so as to bring the face to a vertical position along the whole damaged length. The movement is very slight at the two extremities and attains a maximum at a distance of 1,650 to 1,700 feet from the south angle, where the displacement at the coping level is 7' 5½". From this point of maximum displacement to the south angle, an almost perfect straight line has been preserved, the remaining 400 feet at the north end being more or less bulged. The original batter of the wall was ½" to the foot or about 2' in total height from the foundation, and this amount would represent the forward movement at the top edge of the coping due to tilting, the remainder of the movement, or a maximum of 5' 5½", being the bodily transfer of the whole wall to the front sliding over its bed. The earth backing has sunk an average of perhaps 6' for a distance of 75 to 120 feet from the front of the wall, filling completely the gap caused by the displacement of the wall. The average height through which the wall has sunk is 15'.

Shortly after the occurrence above mentioned, a serious movement and fracture of the wall at the south-west angle of the Dock took place. About 450 feet of the inclined portion of the wall was affected, and about 50 feet adjoining this at the end of the Dock. The greatest forward movement was at a point 120 feet from the angle of the side walls, being 12' 11½", allowing 2 feet for the tilting of the wall, a forward movement of the whole wall of nearly 11 feet. The masonry of this portion is much shaken, showing cracks both on the face extending through the wall and longitudinal cracks. No less than seven cracks appear on the face of the wall and extending through it, while one appears at the extremity of the detached length at the end of the Dock. The mass of masonry here appears to have received a severe wrench from the fore exerted by the backing at the point of maximum displacement, the movement of the wall itself is small.

It was regretted to us that since the first movement of the walls no further displacement or settlement has taken place. The masonry of both the damaged walls appears to us to be of thorough good quality.

General remarks.—We are of opinion that fair progress was made with the work up to the end of the quarter, which would have been maintained to the date of our inspection but for the partial failure of the Dock walls. The quality of the work, as far as we have been able to judge is satisfactory."

We understand Mr. Bruce is coming out to India to doctor the dilapidated lock. Whatever the chances of the patient, there is the certainty of another drain of the public purse. More money is to be sunk. "It must be found for his idle hands." With such a prospect of active commission on the part of the Commissioners' purchases is not ent to keep in peace at home an Old Indian Pasha of the Public Works. By the bye, has he explained his permission to Mr. Bush to receive the private honorarium for supervision of the re of the lost Sir John Lawrence?

From the Army and Navy Gazette:—

Two Crimean veterans are about to publish their memoirs, —Mahon, the hero of the Malakof, of Magenta—aye, and of Wörth, he did all that skill and courage could do with 35,000 Frenchmen fend a position assailed at last by more than 110,000 Prussians Bavarians. Ex-President of the French Republic, General in the great wars, after a long career of military service, his opinions, relations, and reminiscences must be of the greatest interest to the soldier, the statesman, and the historian. The memoirs of Marshal Canrobert, if less important to the politician, should be of immense value to all who desire to learn from the lips of one of the most prominent of the actors in the struggle before Sebastopol, and in the tremendous days of fighting round Metz—where the old Marshal, at the head of the Imperial Guard, displayed the admirable qualities of which he had long before given proof on the plateau when he dashed to our aid in the ravine of Inkerman—his personal impressions of the events in which he bore so distinguished a part."

HERE is a quotation from an article on Mahomedans and the Play "Mahomet" in England from the Daily Telegraph :—

"Should Mahomet be presented on the stage? Should the susceptibilities of his followers be respected so far as to induce the French and English Governments to forbid representations of his career at the Paris or London theatres? The question presses. An English novelist of ability and repute has written a play on the subject 'for a famous actor and dear friend.' M. Bornier, the French dramatist, has also prepared a drama with Mahomet as its hero, and the other day it was about to be produced in Paris. On hearing this the Mussalmans of Bombay appealed to the Sultan to remonstrate, through his Ambassador, and to point out that it would be 'an insult and a mockery to put their Prophet on the stage.' The petitioners spoke, no doubt, on general grounds; had they known M. Bornier's method of working they might have been more earnest in their objections. The French dramatist takes considerable liberty with history. He makes Ayesha, the Prophet's favourite wife, a follower of Christ, and bitterly opposed to her husband's new creed. She also has a lover, Safwan, whom she prefers to Mahomet—a touch of French license which is, perhaps, inevitable in a play intended for the boulevards. At the end of the drama Mahomet desponds; he doubts his own success; he prophesies that Christianity will live for ever, and that Islam will fall. Finally having lost faith in his cause, in his wife, and in his followers, he commits suicide and brings the curtain down. It is certainly not surprising that such a play should be forbidden on political grounds. The English Government might call upon the French Government to prohibit a drama travestying the life of the man whom their Mahomedan subjects regard as their prophet and saint, the founder of their Empire, their policy, and their creed. During the second Empire, the Lord Chamberlain, as a matter of international courtesy alone, would have forbidden any drama in which Napoleon was represented in an undignified way. Yet French feeling for the great Corsican is far inferior to the feeling of Islam for Mahomet. We go even further than respect for religious susceptibilities; we do not allow our politicians to be put upon the stage. Some years ago the Lord Chamberlain stopped a burlesque in which actors were made up to represent Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Lowe, and Mr. Ayrton. It was felt at once that, while our writers and artists were free to lampoon and to caricature our statesmen, their introduction into the theatre was a step beyond legitimate license. It would lead to the degradation alike of the theatre itself and of our methods of political controversy. Audiences would cheer or hiss according to politics, and we should turn pit and gallery into bear gardens, with free fights between contending partisans. If we thus wisely keep politics from our stage, how much more reason is there to exclude religion!"

SIR Charles Elliott is expected in Calcutta on the morning of the 26th. He does not come as Lieutenant-Governor, and he would not have his privacy intruded upon by obliging and officious friends, nor disturbed by the recognised Durbaris.

SIR Stuart Bayley has permission to resign the Lieutenant-Governorship from the 17th December next, when he makes over charge. The honors of the place will be continued to him till he embarks for Europe.

THE appointment of Sir Charles Alfred Elliott, K.C.S.I., as Lieutenant-Governor of the Bengal Division of the Presidency of Fort William is Gazetted. The Governor-General appoints him, subject to the approbation of Her Majesty the Queen-Empress, to be notified in due form hereafter.

MR. A. Mackenzie, C.S.I., has made over charge to Mr. J. W. Neill, who officiates as Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces, pending the arrival from England of the new permanent incumbent, Mr. A. P. MacDonnell, C.S.I., the Home Secretary, on leave.

MR. Mackenzie is on his way to Ragoon via Calcutta. He arrives there on December 7, when he assumes the Chief Commissionership of Burma from Sir Charles Crosthwaite.

LADY Lansdowne returned to India on Monday, and joined the Viceroy, on Wednesday at Delhi. She was to have attended the festivities at Jeypore. This delay must have been disappointing to the Jeypore Durbar.

LORD Lansdowne has completed his visit to the old Mogul Palace. He held a levée there. The Viceregal camp has moved down to where there will be a Durbar.

THE Viceregal re-entry to Calcutta is programmed for Tuesday, 9th December. The Legislative Council is announced for Friday, the 12th following. The Calcutta season opens with the Levée on the 16th and the Drawing Room on the 18th December.

NOTES, LEADERETTES, AND OUR OWN NEWS.

LONDON is passing through a financial crisis affecting the whole trading world. Last Saturday, the Times came out with the startling news that a most grave crisis in the City has been averted by the prompt combination of the Bank of England and other leading houses to bolster up one of the most important financial houses in London, which is largely concerned in South American loans, the Bank of France lending the Bank of England three millions sterling to tide over the squeeze in money. The next telegram, that of the 17th, disclosed the honoured name of the Baring Brothers as the firm in difficulty, and the cause of its distress was stated to be the sudden withdrawal by the Russian Government of five millions. We suspect the real cause to be those South American transactions. A guarantee fund which then amounted to nine millions was started with one million of the Bank of England. It now stands at 15 millions. The New York stock markets were excited, followed by several large failures. The firm goes into liquidation, to revive, it is hoped, into a new Company with old partners but fresh capital. Mr. Thomas Baring has left New York on this mission. The latest news is that "Baring Brothers" will be converted into a Limited Company with Mr. Thomas Charles Baring for Chairman, with a capital of one million, which has nearly all been subscribed by the family and their friends.

THE fame of Dr. Koch's new cure has travelled wide, and phthisis patients are flocking to Berlin. Fifteen hundred foreign doctors have arrived there to study the cure. The Doctor has named his lymph "paratoid."

THE O'Shea-Parnell Divorce suit commenced without Mr. Parnell, who, as the event showed, had not a leg to stand upon. The wife charged her husband with adultery with her sister and others and with cohabitation. Mr. O'Shea is an honest knave and denied not promiscuous intercourse, but he protested against the base insinuation of a horny head. Mr. Lockwood, Counsel for the wife, informed the court that he would take no part in the proceedings. Mr. Clark, Counsel for the husband, proved meetings between the respondent Mrs. O'Shea and the co-respondent Mr. Parnell. Under the circumstances, the petitioner easily obtained a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage.

The conduct of Mr. Parnell is assailed in many quarters. The papers discuss the question of the retention of his seat in Parliament and continuance in the leadership of the Nationalist party. There is division in the Irish camp itself. At a meeting of the National League at Dublin, Mr. Edmond, in the name of the party, scouted the idea of Mr. Parnell's retirement from public life. Mr. Michael Davitt, on the other hand, demands the severance for the good of Ireland. The moral indignation against Mr. Parnell is a momentary cry. Where sinners abound, there can be no true boycotting of sin. Mr. Parnell is a more important public man than Sir Charles Dilke, and he will tide over his exposure more easily than the smart literary baronet. So it seems Mr. Parnell's mysterious movements were not all due to the exigencies of his peculiar public position. There was Love of woman at bottom, not merely Hate towards the Saxon. The exigencies of Lust explain the mystery and studied secrecy better.

THE Minister of Marine announced on the 14th, in the French Chamber of Deputies, the abandonment of the enormous guns in the Navy in favor of those of thirty tons capable of piercing any armour. We suppose the other Powers will now follow suit.

THE German Budget for the next year provides for a loan of sixty-four million marks for the Army, Navy, Railways and Post.

THE Tipperary trial has concluded. Messrs. Dillon and O'Brien and nine more have been sentenced to six months' imprisonment. How will the order be carried out on the absent delinquents? We may expect other proceedings when the agitators have done their work in America.

LADY Rosebery has succumbed to the fever that was preying upon her. We had hoped for her recovery both for herself and Lord Rosebery. She leaves a mighty gap in society.

IN a Paris hotel, a Polish Nihilist has sent a Russian General to his last account.

A WING is to be added to the Lewis Jubilee Sanitarium at Darjeeling. Before he came down, the Lieutenant-Governor laid the foundation stone of a house to be called after the Zemindar of Dimla, in Rungpore. Baboo Janoki Bulluv Sen, who bears the cost of construction to the extent of Rs. 25,000. The addition is meant entirely for the accommodation of the orthodox Hindoo. Mr. Lewis, the Commissioner of the Division, is unremitting in his efforts to thoroughly establish the only place in Darjeeling for native tourists and visitors and the sick. It is lamentable that native Judges and members of Council consider it infra dig to take up their quarters at the Sanitarium. Being a native institution, they think it their duty to keep away from it. We hope such a feeling will not scare away other honorable members of the native community. Sir Steuart Bayley remembered that he was not likely to be at Darjeeling again, and thus gave out his mind and appealed for funds for the institution :—

"Darjeeling is growing rapidly : in a short time Lebong will receive the wing of a European regiment which it is destined for, and this means a very much larger addition to the population, and therefore to the trade of the place, than the mere number of soldiers for whom Government will build barracks. Again, in every direction I see new buildings springing up, some of them on sites which I cannot contemplate without misgiving. But apart from all this I am convinced, that the result of the Native Sanitarium when once its advantages are fully realised, will be something far beyond a mere increase in the applicants for admission to its own immediate benefit. It means that hereafter Darjeeling will become a health resort, just as much to the wealthier classes of the native community in Bengal, as it is now to the European, and this again involves a very large increase to the trade and wealth of the place and to the responsibilities of the Municipality, especially in the direction of controlling the selection of building sites, and the construction of houses. I believe Darjeeling to have a great future before it, and I deeply regret that this is the last visit I am ever likely to pay it, for notwithstanding the tastes which people are good enough to credit me with, I am profoundly attached to the place, and if I had only my own tastes to consult, I should have liked to spend (8) eight months out of every 12 here. In point of accessibility and scenery it is superior to every hill station in India ; in point of salubrity I believe it to be inferior to none, and those who are able to enjoy as I do the innumerable and too little known walks in the neighbourhood cannot fail to love it. All the more are honor and gratitude due to those who have given their money, their time, and their influence to bringing these delights and advantages within the reach of an ever-growing number of our native fellow subjects. No boon could be greater, no method of public benefaction, more worthy or more useful. I notice that Mr. Lewis is again at work in endeavouring to raise subscriptions for the endowment of a number of free beds for the poorer classes of the community. I commend his endeavours to your hearty sympathy and co-operation, and wish them all possible success. Your institution will ever have my warmest interest, and I hope that it will have an ever increasing career of prosperity and usefulness."

A WORTHY and respected citizen of Bombay has passed away in the person of Muncherji N. Banaji. His services to the town have been suitably acknowledged in an unanimous Resolution of the Corporation. Member after member rose, Indian and European, to testify to the merits of the deceased.

The occasion was interesting as showing the strength of the personnel of the Western Corporation. Our Calcutta body is not to be compared for a moment with it. We are weak in both natives and Europeans, and we have not the advantage of such a practical element as the Parsees supply there. Even there, they are losing ground. The original Bombay strength may be gathered from the necrological bead-roll given in the following wail of the Rast Goftar :—

"It is sad to think that one by one the good old members of the Corporation belonging to the first generation of its corporate existence are passing away. Rao Saheb Mandlik has gone ; Navroji Furdoonji has gone ; Sir Frank Souter has gone, and now Mr. Banaji. The Corporation paid his memory a just tribute by passing a very appreciative resolution, on the motion of Sir Henry Morland and adjourning without doing any business. Among the members who rose on that occasion to testify to the worth of their departed colleague was our respected citizen, Dr. Blaney, who warmly commended Mr. Banaji's independence which he said he found in all the Parsi members of the Corporation, and which was, indeed, a very gratifying feature, because it was at the bottom of sound local self-government. The other speakers who rose to express their sense of the loss suffered by civic Government by Mr. Banaji's death were Mr. Dossabhoj Framji, a very staunch and old friend of his, Dr. Cowasji Hormusji, Mr. Javerilal and Mr. Acworth, the Municipal Commissioner, observing with perfect justice that Mr. Banaji joined to the remarkable business capacity of his race every quality that went to make an upright, a high-minded and an honourable gentleman."

THE decision of Colonel Marshall, the Sessions and Divisional Judge, Lahore, in the Warburton defamation case, is disappointing all round. It is solemn "chaff." The orders of the lower court have been upheld, except as to the fine on the proprietor which has been reduced by Rs. 500 to Rs. 2,000. The editor's appeal has been rejected, as also the prosecutor's application for revision.

MR. Buchanan, the correspondent of the Tribune, found it hard to gulp the bitter pill of the apology dictated. He published a modified version which was not accepted, and he has been allowed time to publish it as it is, as the price of his acquittal. He must do the bidding, poor man ! The law is stern, and Justice—blind.

IN India the Law is Draconian and administration absurd and pitiless to a degree unknown in other civilised lands. Just now, the courts are specially harsh towards infancy of the male gender. For girls there is sympathy enough, and to spare perhaps, but no mercy to boyhood. Not long ago, there was a painful case in the Lower Provinces. The last judicial outrage has occurred in the Panjab.

At Lahore, for jumping over a school wall and posting a bill defamatory of the schoolmaster, a student of ten was charged with lurking house-trespass and convicted and sentenced by the Magistrate to three months' imprisonment. On appeal, the District Magistrate thought that the boy should have been convicted of house-trespass at night and exhibiting objectionable literature. He therefore upheld the conviction, but reduced the sentence by half, on account of the boy's youth and his being a cat's paw in the hands of others. Not to be charged with a tenderness for the tender he did not feel, he took care to make up for the clipped half by adding a fine of Rs. 10. The High Court, on further appeal, considered the boy rightly served, and declined to interfere. The comment of the press is that the punishment is excessively severe. The freakishness of boys is wellknown, and is usually independent of criminal intent. They perpetrate a wrong for the fun of the thing, and the Judge is not worth his salt who cannot discriminate between fun and crime.

BEGUM Sakeena has sued, in the Madras High Court, her husband Prince Mahomed Manara Khan of Arcot, for one lac of rupees—her marriage dower. The first question raised was, Was the Prince exempt from attendance in Court? It was claimed by Mr. Willie Grant that he was, as, he argued, Act XX. of 1873 applied to all Arcot Princes, although it exempted by name only Prince Azim Jah and his son on succession. Mr. Justice Handley regretted that the Act went against the Prince. He was indeed, by birth and position, clearly entitled to the exemption, but neither the law nor the Government orders enabled the Judge to do as he would wish. He therefore refused an application to examine him by Commission. It transpired in the course of argument that the Prince is entitled to a salute, but the Government would not grant him the privilege of exemption from appearance in Court. Verily, India is a land of anomalies !

THE Indian Daily News of the 19th November commences a leaderette thus :—

"A rather nice question in morals, if not in law, is raised by a correspondent who complains bitterly in an up-country paper of 'the abuse of the value-payable system.' The case is put thus : 'A Calcutta tradesman who had sent in several bills to a mofussil customer without result enclosed one as a V. P. parcel, and thus obtained payment from his unwitting debtor. The fact was duly reported to the postal authorities, by whom no notice was taken of the fraud.'"

Our contemporary should have remembered that to discourage such a practice, the Postal Department has changed the form of the V. P. order. It requires a declaration by the sender that the parcel is in execution of a bond fide order. If the too clever tradesman reads his dues on such a parcel, he clearly transgressed the rule by a false declaration, which is certainly punishable under the law. The P. O. rule, it must be confessed, is more concerned with the realization of its commission than with the prevention of crime, for it makes the commission prepayable and if the parcel is refused the commission is not returned. That may account for the Department's unconcern complained of by the correspondent.

Our contemporary would justify the means by the end. The I. D. News asks, "But was it a fraud, where the object aimed at and accomplished was not to swindle anybody, but merely to recover payment of a just debt?" The writer of course reasons independently of the element of the false declaration involved. But apart from that falsehood, his calmer judgment will surely tell him that it is sharp practice more worthy of a Yankee huckster than an honest British or Indu tradesman.

THE ninetieth birthday of Count von Moltke was observed with unusual ceremonies. On Saturday, the 25th October, there was a torchlight procession of 20,000 persons. The proceedings of the next day are thus described:—

"On Sunday morning Count von Moltke received the congratulations of the Emperor in the conference hall of the General Staff, in presence of all the military magnates of the empire, all the commanding generals of its twenty army corps, all the officers of the grand General Staff, together with Chancellor General von Caprivi, Field-Marshal Blumenthal, and other general inspectors of the army, his Majesty's maison militaire, and a brilliant gathering of others. Beside the Emperor stood the King of Saxony, the Grand Dukes of Baden, Hesse, and Saxe-Weimar; Prince Leopold of Bavaria, as representing the Prince-Regent of that kingdom; Prince Albrecht, Regent of Brunswick—all Prussian Princes; the Duke of Connaught, etc. Count Waldersee, Chief of the Staff, and General von Wittich, Commandant of the Imperial Headquarters' Staff, led in Count Moltke. Hastening to meet the Count, his Majesty led him into the midst and addressed him as follows:—

"I thank you in the name of those who have fought together with you and whose most faithful and devoted servant you have been. I thank for all you have done for my house and for the greatness of the Fatherland. We greet in you not only a Prussian leader who has won for the army the reputation of being invincible, but one of the founders of the German Empire. The presence of the King of Saxony, who has made a point of personally congratulating you, recalls the time when he and you fought for Germany's greatness. The distinctions conferred upon you by my grandfather leave nothing in which I can personally show my thanks to you. I beg you to accept the only evidence of my profound regard which I can bring you. It is with special pride that I renounce to-day the privilege of a Monarch—namely, to have the flags of the army standing in his ante-chamber, and I beg you to take possession of the flags of the Guards, which have waved under you in many battles. As a personal memento I ask you to take the Field Marshal's staff, which you have already won before the enemy, as a symbol of my regard, devotion, and gratitude. I call upon all those present to express their feelings of gratitude that Field-Marshal von Moltke has known how not to stand alone in his greatness, but to form a school of leaders of the army for time to come and for all future generations, by giving cheers for his Excellency."

"At this moment a photographer caught the scene, which is afterwards to be elaborated on canvas by Professor von Werner. Count Moltke could only find a few brief and incoherent words of reply, but he took the Emperor's hand and imprinted on it a long fervent kiss. Afterwards the building was invaded by a steady stream of persons bringing felicitations. Princess Frederick Charles, widow of the capturer of Metz, came personally with a bouquet of roses. The Empress Frederick and her daughters drove to the Königsplatz on Saturday, and remained a quarter of an hour with the Count. In the course of Sunday morning more than 1,000 letters and telegrams reached the Count from all parts of the world. Their Imperial Majesties gave a grand banquet in the New Palace at Potsdam in honour of the Field-marshal, covers being laid for nearly 200."

Moltke is a man of silence, wrapped up in the cloak of his own meditations. Without such habitual concentration and introspection, he could scarcely undertake to direct from home as it were the most weighty operations in actual war. A German friend of ours, versed in all languages and all the "ologies" and distinguished in several branches of inquiry, who lived as an immediate neighbour of the Count's, told us that, although daily crossing him on the footpath and saluting him, he never had a word with the old General and never saw him speak to another. To such a man all this crowded and noisy demonstration, however well-meant, must have been infinitely trying. But a grander compliment was never paid to any warrior servant.

Is the Republic reduced to rags? It is certainly disclosing its nakedness and vulgarity. There is a proposition to tax titles in France. A Bill on that behalf has been laid on the table of the Chamber, by M. Emile Moreau, a deputy for the Department of the Nord. He is not for reimposition of the Revolutionary decree of the 17th June 1790 of the Constituent Assembly abolishing titles of nobility. He is only fishing in the Red waters of Revolutionary ideas for some money. He has hit upon his project in the interests of the public treasury. And certainly a more original scheme of local finance was never propounded. His idea is to authorize every municipality to offer the use of its name as a title to the highest bidder. The names not only of towns and communes, but also of estates, farms, and simple dwelling-houses, would thus, so to say, be put up for auction. Every commune thereby comes in for titles—to sell. He would reserve Dukes and Princes for the chief towns of departments, Marquises and Counts for those of arrondissements, Viscounts and Barons for cantons, and Chevaliers for villages. He is not devoid of moderation or even generosity. He has no desire to disturb the present holders. He would only make them pay for the titles. He proposes the following scale:—

"For the use of 'De,' 500 fr. per annum; for the repetition of that particle, 1,000 fr. per annum; for the title of Chevalier, 1,000 fr. per annum; for that of Baron, 5,000 fr. per annum; for that of Viscount, 10,000 fr. per annum; for that of Count, 20,000 fr. per annum; for that of Marquis, 30,000 fr. per annum; for that of Duke, 50,000 fr. per annum; for that of Prince, 1,00,000 fr. per annum; for that of Duke or Count, accompanied with the title of Highness, 2,00,000 fr. per annum; for that of Prince, accompanied with the title of Highness, 250,000 fr. per annum. 50 per cent. additional for all those who may permit their wives to participate in the use of their title, and an additional 25 per cent. would be charged for each child bearing a title derived from that of his father. Widows bearing titles would have to pay the full annual tax."

The depths of human baseness it is not easy to sound, and there may be those who will seize at this opportunity to be called somebodies by payment. We see many such about us among our own countrymen. Still we doubt whether the number of French Philistines ready to purchase respectability is large enough to make the measure a financial success. The ancient nobility would scarcely care to retain their titles on such terms. What then? Their titles may be confiscated, but, then, territorial names can not so easily be seized, and these are worth more than titles. Logically, the Bill should contain a provision for punishing those who address men by their titles resumed or in abeyance.

HITHERTO human research and ingenuity had been baffled in the search for a substitute for tobacco. But in our times—the hey-day of Science and of Shams—when nothing is too sacred for trifling—when silver and gold are mimicked without compunction, and even the most important gems are daily counterfeited, poor old Baccy cannot escape Vandalic raids. An Australian shrub, the Duboisia Hopnoodii, the leaves of which the natives there chew for soothing them in the midst of toil and allaying the pangs of hunger, has been advanced as the rival of the old royal conqueror. The leaves contain an alkaloid which has been named piturine, supposed, by some chemists, to be the same as the active principle of tobacco, nicotine; others think them to be only closely allied. The British Medical Journal now announces that Messrs. Langely and Dickinson have shown that there is no difference, the action of the one being in every respect identical with the action of the other.

THE Bamboo is one of the best gifts of God to our land, scarcely inferior to the cocoanut. In the first place, it is charming to behold. The old travellers wrote in raptures of it. Then, its uses are manifold. It is the people's house-architect. Nay, it performs all the duties of a substantial forest-tree, of a good furniture wood, of a plant for posts and sticks, and of common bush fuel. It is not much employed in medicine that we know of. But it occasionally yields a medicine of great importance, though as yet unappreciated by European doctors—we refer to the Tabasir of the Arabic pharmacopœia. A new value of it has now been discovered.

"It is generally thought that bamboo being so light and small make a bad fuel wood, and no one would think it of any value as fuel for forges; yet it is considered the best material for making charcoal for blacksmith work, and, according to a Bangalore paper, is in large demand all over Mysore. It is said to give off more heat than the best coke and to require less blast. A maund of bamboo charcoal fetches twice as much in the village-markets as the best charcoal than any other fuel. The method of charring bamboo is different to that used for harder woods—the stacks or kilns being carefully covered with green leaves and then plastered with wet clay. While the burning is going on care is taken to exclude air as much as possible, without extinguishing the fire."

This is really a discovery of no small economic interest.

THE Committee for Police Reform in Bengal, composed of Mr. John Beames, Commissioner of Bhagulpore, as President, and Mr. J. F. Stevens, Judge of Gya, and Mr. J. C. Veasey, Inspector-General of Police, as members, have been added to by the inclusion of Raja Peary Mohun Mookerjee, of Utterpara, as member, and Mr. H. H. Risley, of the Secretariat, now on furlough, as member and Secretary.

READERS of the delightful Life of Scott by his son-in-law will remember that, besides his journal of his Shetland journey, in 1814, the great literary creator left a Diary for the years 1825-32. Lockhart made good use of both, enriching his pages with copious extracts. One would suppose that he had extracted all the cream of the record. This is a hasty view. Literary men who have carefully examined the MSS. have expressed a different opinion. At any rate, the public will soon be in a position to judge for themselves. Edited by Mr. David Douglas, Scott's Journal will soon appear. And the publisher's Quarterly Review for October has an advance article to advertise it and whet public curiosity.

THE Bengal Chamber of Commerce which, by persistent hammering, broke through the continuity of the Doorga Pooja holidays, is a greater respecter of the Kali Puja holidays than the Government Dock Yard at Kidderpore. The Bonded Ware House meeting of the proprietors was postponed from the 12th, because it was a public holiday as was also the next day, on account of the Kali Pooja. Here, however, is the notice issued in the Docks by the Deputy Director :—

"The Dockyard will work to-morrow during the half hour midday interval and will ring out instead at 4 P. M. On Wednesday the Yard will be kept open for urgent work. Heads of Departments will arrange to give as many of the permanent staff as can be spared leave after 2 P. M. to-morrow, and on Wednesday will arrange also to give leave to any clerk that can be spared leave on account of that Pooja festival.

(Sd.) A. CAMPBELL,
Dy.-Director.

3rd November 1890."

We also publish the office memo issued by the same officer of Government during the Doorga Poojas. By Government notification, the full twelve days of the holidays were to be observed in all the India offices in Calcutta other than the Office of Issue of the Paper Currency Department and the Office of the Comptroller and Auditor-General. Yet we find the Deputy Director of Indian Marine directing that "During the working days of the Pooja holidays, the Establishment will work throughout the midday interval and be rung out at 4 P. M. The Yard will be closed except for urgent work and repairs to machinery from 1 P. M. on Saturday until Thursday morning when work will be resumed. The work on the Torpedo slip will be considered as urgent and will be proceeded with.

One clerk will attend in Deputy-Director's office daily for such time as required during the close days.

(Sd.) A. CAMPBELL,
Dy.-Director.

17th October 1890."

To understand the full consideration shewn by the Deputy Director to the employes, it is necessary to explain that there are about 50 Hindn clerks in the Establishment. The office hours are from 10 in the forenoon to 5 in the evening, except on Saturdays when the men are required to attend only from 10 to 1. Half an hour between 1 and 2 is allowed for lunch. The artificers are required to attend from 8 in the morning to 5 in the evening, excepting one hour for lunch between 1 and 2. There is no hour for refreshment on Saturdays when the men are free after 1 P. M.

A greater sinner is the Officiating Accountant-General, Bengal. Three or four days before the Doorga Pooja holidays, Mr. Kiernander issued a circular to the following effect :—

No Gazetted holiday should be observed as a holiday without the special order of the Accountant-General. Two days previous to any public holiday, the heads of Departments must report to the Accountant-General whether there is any arrear of work. Whatever the arrear, slight though it be, the Superintendents must report the number of hands required to go through the work during the holiday.

Only the four "strictly religious" days of the Doorga Pooja holidays were ordered by His Supreme Excellency the Accountant-General for the Book and Compilation Departments, the assistants, two dozens Hindus, being obliged to attend office all the other days of the long vacation, excepting Sundays of course. A greater number had to forego the Kali Pooja holidays. During the Juggodhatri Pooja, the Treasury Accounts Department was ordered to remain open, only such hands as could the previous day finish the work due that day being allowed to absent themselves on Thursday and Friday.

The Government of India assured the memorialists praying for preservation of the Doorga Pooja holidays that it was anxious that its orders as to excepted offices were not dead letter. Little did it know that its orders would be observed in their breach in the unexcepted offices. It is necessary, therefore, that Government should know how the orders have been worked. We trust that both the Governments of India and Bengal will call for reports shewing how the holidays were and are observed in both the excepted and unexcepted offices under them.

ONE of the most interesting cases of beggar frauds has lately been discovered in France. The culprit is a physiological curiosity, who turned his personal peculiarities to account to obtain board and lodging at the public expense. He is an old soldier, of about 31 years of age, who had served under the French flag in Tunis. It was there he contracted scarlet fever. The doctor who attended him applied what is called the 'pencil test.' He drew a pencil along his skin to see if it would leave the characteristic white mark of this fever. The patient's skin gradually swelled up and the pencil tracing was clearly discernible. He treasured up the hint. On his return to France, he began imitating all sorts of fevers which affect the skin, by which he obtained easy admission to the public hospitals. Such was his success that he pursued it for a living. He lately applied at the Lariboisière Hospital, Paris, pretending fever, and, being admitted, in two days exhibited an eruption on his chest. Here, at last, he found his match in the physician of the establishment, Dr. Louis Gallet. The doctor actually aggravated the rash by touching his skin with a pencil. Having now made sure of his patient, Dr. Gallet traced on his back the words 'possessed by the devil,' and sure enough the skin showed the inscription in bold relief. The game was up, and the fellow made a clean breast of the whole thing. He had followed up the knowledge derived from his first real attack with various experiments on his skin and he had produced various phenomena. Keeping his own counsel, he had been able to live tolerably well each time he was thrown out of work. He simulated an attack of measles by pricking himself with a fork and inflaming his eyes with soap. Scarlatina he imitated easily with a brush. For other diseases, other methods were employed. He could bring on the depression and feverishness required to complete the deception by over-night's debauch with absinthe and cognac. He is sure to be heard of again. He has no mind to turn honest. Indeed, before leaving the hospital, he promised the doctor a rare fun, if he did not tell any one. He would now go and cheat the surgeons with mock paralysis as he had cheated the physicians with mock fevers.

THE energetic Assessor to the Calcutta Corporation has taken to bed again—a victim to overwork. He applied for six months' leave on medical certificate. The General Committee have granted the leave and appointed Mr. Cooper, the Road Superintendent who last time satisfactorily officiated for Baboo Mahatap Chand Mullick, to act as Assessor. Mr. Wintgens, Assistant Engineer in the Drainage Department, has also gone on leave. The Department gains in Mr. Johnstone, Superintendent, Water Works, who is expected to shew steady good work. He is replaced by Baboo Matilal Ash, who, as engineer to the late contractor Sham C. Koorar, smoothed matters between him and Mr. Kimber and impressed the Engineer to the Corporation, and had since been taken in on temporary municipal service.

THE INCOME TAX—IN PRACTICE.

THE Government has at last made up its mind to make the Income-tax permanent. All the early professions of its especial character to meet an especial emergency, have been either lost sight of or differently interpreted, and it is now boldly declared that the question of its abolition or modification is not likely to arise within a measurable distance of time. As indications of this change in the Government mind, orders have recently been issued declaring service in the Income-tax Department to be permanent and pensionable, and the assessing agency has been revised and strengthened. There is joy among our Assessors, and we would gladly sympathise with them, only wishing that, with the present certainty of their position, they learnt to do their duty justly.

As it is, there is a large amount of oppression committed in the assessment of the lowest classes, and this consciously and of set purpose. The arbitrary rules of the Department's own ingenious devising, for the guidance of the practical work of assessment, are surely meant for a help to the discretion of the Assessors, but, being generally enforced rigidly, they are a source of great pain and misery to poorer dealers and tradesmen. These are the people who can least help themselves, and that is the very best reason in the Income-tax Department's eyes why they should be forced to pay even when it is known they earn no assessable income. The procedure for the assessment is thoroughly arbitrary, and redress from the assessors' arbitrary proceedings is hopeless with the poorer class of appellants. To be once in the Assessor's book dooms one's fate for ever, and appeals to Collectors or Commissioners are generally mere waste of trouble.

The hateful impost being now declared permanent, the public and the press must now direct their efforts to secure a fair and just administration of the tax. A great deal of its unpopularity would then be removed, but unfortunately there is no proper agency amongst us for this purpose. The press cannot deal with specific cases except casually, while what is wanted is an organisation to act as a systematic check upon the proceedings of the assessing officers. Our Rate-payers' Associations might usefully divert a portion of their municipal zeal in this new channel, and mitigate the harshness with which the operations of the tax officers are generally conducted. The one object of these men is to swell the revenue. This is by no means an unworthy object. The natural tendency of all fiscal officers is and must be directed towards it. But, however worthy an object it may be, it should be properly attained. In our view of the case, the revenue should be maintained by all means, but there are means and means. An able and just officer will swell the revenue by seeing there is no non-assessment in the upper grades of income. Such is scarcely to be expected of the present staff. The disclosures made lately in connection with the assessment of the Marwaris of Calcutta and other commercial and trading people of the upper classes, prove how much of under-assessment prevailed before. We fear there is as much of it in the country at large at this moment. Our assessing agency, who are so great bullies in dealing with humbler people, betray a very contrary attitude before richer classes, who easily manage to escape lightly. Great loss of revenue is the consequence, and it is made good by the overassessment and unjust assessment of helpless people, who either should not be assessed at all or assessed at a lower figure. This is one way of dealing with the revenue, and we fear one too common. What we would have is a legal assessment of the tax. We would have every one with an assessable income loyally yielding his just due up to the last pie, but none without an assessable income called upon to contribute anything. Can the Income-tax Assessors and the Deputy Collectors, who are called Collectors for the purposes of this tax, claim this amount of lawful fairness for their operations? Are they not consciously conniving at a great deal of over-assessment, as well as of assessment of unassessable incomes? This they do to increase the revenue. They are wittingly guilty of all this unfairness for an object fairly attainable with vigilant and careful knowledge by, in fact, simply preventing under-assessment of bigger incomes. Crime upon crime, while they let the powerful rich who can as easily pay as make the tax-gatherer uncomfortable and even tremble for his place, they seize the poor whose misfortune places them above, or below if you will, fiscal legislation of all kinds.

THE RISHIS RESCUED.

A GREAT deal of capital is being made of the unfortunate case of Hari Mohan Maiti by the advocates of so-called social reform. Almost all the Anglo-Indian papers are full of denunciations against our ancient law and religion, as if the only grievances we suffer from under the British rule are those arising out of the imperfections of our marriage laws. Our friends of the ruling caste may have a motive in their persistent efforts to cram down our throats their own ideas on the subject. They can not certainly have any sympathy with our political aspirations, and they might consider nothing more desirable than to direct our energies to other channels. To those who preach the present crusade against the ancient institutions of our country, with such objects in view, we have nothing to say. But we ask the really conscientious and thoughtful reformer not to proceed on the assumption that the sages whose legislation we follow were so many fools who had not the capacity to appreciate the advantages of adult marriage and Gretna Green-wedlock. Nor is there any ground to suppose that they were self-seeking priests who had a personal interest in enjoining early marriage of girls. For purposes of priest-craft, late marriage would have suited them as well as early marriage. The fact is, that in the state of things existing when our Rishis legislated, the enforcement of early marriage was perhaps the only remedy for bringing about a better order of things. The Rishis never explained the reasons for the doctrines which they inculcated. Their codes do not begin with any preamble setting forth the objects. But there are clear indications in our shastras that they had to cope with very serious difficulties in evolving order out of chaos. The very fact that they had to recognise twelve different kinds of sons, including in the list the son of the unmarried damsel and the son begotten before marriage, points unmistakably to the existence of a condition of society in which promiscuous intercourse was the rule instead of the exception as it is now. The Rishis could not by one stroke of their pen declare that the kshetrajā, the kanina and the sahodrajā were all bastards. But with that wonderful tact which characterizes their legislation, the sages recognized their legitimacy in a manner which paved the way of their being declared bastards afterwards. The reform which was thus effected was brought about partly by regulations imposing restrictions on promiscuous intercourse, and partly by enjoining the early marriage of girls. However sweet adult marriage and courtship may be to young men and women, no one can say that such matrimony does not involve serious risk, specially to the weaker sex even when protected by law. If we are to have the gandhyarvya form of marriage re-introduced into the country, we must also have a law for enabling the Sakuntalas of new India to claim heavy damages against their quondam lovers. Let our reformers think seriously of the matter and say whether they are prepared to subject the courts of the country to the infliction of having to deal frequently with cases like Birdie vs. Pickwick.

It must be obvious to every one that the parties who make love generally dive too deep and lose their heads in the torrent. If left to themselves, they run the risk of taking in marriage actresses, nautch-girls, and wily strumpets. The miseries brought about by such marriages are not unknown to our European friends, and if they are real well-wishers of India, they ought not to be anxious to give us the benefit of a form of matrimony which must in great many cases end in the Divorce Court.

With regard to such evil consequences of child-marriage as are emphasized by the case of Hari Mohan Maiti, our Rishis or their codes are not in any way to blame. Our shastras do not enjoin consummation immediately after the formal ceremony of marriage. On the contrary, intercourse between the married couple is strictly forbidden up to a certain period. We might cite innumerable authorities in support of this position. But the following from the Code of Manu ought to suffice for our present purpose. The great legislator lays down:—

"Let the husband approach his wife in due season, i.e., at the time fit for pregnancy; let him be constantly satisfied with her alone; but except on the forbidden Parva days, he may approach her even out of due season if desired by her."

The meaning of the above will appear clear from the following commentary of Medhatithi:—

"The law relating to marriage has been dealt with. The relationship of husband and wife being complete after the ceremonies, the natural inclination of the parties, unless restrained by the Shaster, might lead them to proceed towards consummation at once. Hence the prohibitory injunction contained in the above shloka. The meaning of it is, that sexual connection should not take place from the day of marriage, but the parties must wait till the first menstruation of the wife. In the treatises on rituals, it is laid down that after the marriage ceremonies, the married couple must lie down for sleep on the bare floor for a certain period which may extend from three days to one year and also abstain from luxurious food and sexual intercourse during the same period. This must be reconciled with the above text by holding that if the first menstruation takes place within one year, the parties are not to have sexual intercourse during that time. It must also be held, that the parties should wait till menstruation even if it took place after one year. By this interpretation all inconsistency between the different smritis is avoided."

We commend the above to the notice of the advocates of enforced reform.

JOGENDRA NATH BHUTTACHARJYA.

DRIVEN TO THE LION'S DEN: OR

LIFE UNDER MARRIAGE BY CHOICE.

THE secret is out. We have stumbled upon it by mere accident. But we won't anticipate. A good illustration of domestic felicity in the West is going round the papers, in an account of the relations between a travelling showman with a menagerie and the spouse of his choice. They might be happy, according to all calculations, but they were not: certainly not the man. They were not ill matched. If she was a strict disciplinarian, he was her obedient humble servant. So much the worse for him. He had not a moment's rest, except perhaps when

His wife was to a neighbour gone,

To hear the chit-chat of the town.

If at such golden intervals he was tempted to give himself some earnest meditation on his fortunes, say, to find out what sin in this or a previous birth had mated him thus, he was in danger of a rude awakening, like poor Dr. Syntax of classical and Hudibrastic memory.

But, while he pac'd the room around,

Or stood immers'd in thought profound,

The Doctor, 'midst his rumination,

Was waken'd by a visitation

Which troubles many a poor man's life—

The visitation of his wife.

We fancy the poor showman's good woman

Ten years perhaps, beyond her hey-day;

But though the blooming charms had flown

That grac'd her youth, it still was known

The love of power she never lost,

As Showman found it to his cost:

For as her words were used to flow,

He but replied or, yes or no.—

Whene'er enrag'd by some disaster,

She'd shake the boys and cuff the master:

Nay, to avenge the slightest wrong,

She could employ both arms and tongue,

And, if we list to country tales,

She sometimes would enforce her nails.

Her portrait has not been painted for the benefit of the public. We are not told if

Her face was red, her form was fat,

A round-about, and rather squat;

And when in angry humour stalking,

Was like a dumpling set a-walking.

All we know is that

'Twas not the custom of this spouse

To suffer long a quiet house:

She was among those busy wives

Who hurry-scurry through their lives;

And make amends for fading beauty

By telling husbands of their duty.

And Mrs. Showman demonstrated her counsel in the most telling way. If her husband was a niggard in speech and basely uncommunicative to his wedded consort, she was liberal to profusion. She was an incisive conversationist, never failing to dig her points into his laggard person and block head. Thus she managed to prevent his vegetating in repose, giving movement to his poor limbs and employment to his pate. As for the heart which, in some conjunction of stars, he had given her, the good woman never neglected it. It could not be heavy for a moment, seeing that she always kept it sore and bleeding. For pain and anguish, she was a ministering angel—of destruction. There never was such a minister to a mind diseased of the husband tribe. All the lady doctors on both sides of the Atlantic, with their hard-earned diplomas, pale before this self-made female Sangrado. She is certainly a grand Surgeon Major—a mighty phlebotomist. She gives the lie to poor Sir Walter Scott's libel on her kind. There is no coyness or uncertainty about her operations or ways. She, at any rate, is not variable as the shade

By the light quivering aspen made.

Quivering, indeed! Husbands may quiver—not a wife. Aspen and shade, pooh! Such comparisons may suit the veiled ugliness of the Oriental home,—not the British woman who knows her rights and knowing, dare to assert them. She may be versatile in her methods of war—various in her weapons of attack or defence—but never variable in her purpose. Mrs. Showman's Policy is ever the same,

Kings may be blest, but she was glorious

O'er a' the ills o' life victorious.

By such a constant succession of successes, she wrought herself into a terror to her lord of courtesy. Her crowning victory remains to be recorded. One day Madam Britannia armed with her trident made such persistent war on her man, chasing him with her poker with such fury round and round the show, that the poor fellow, seeing no way of escape, flung himself for protection on the lion's den. He quickly opened the cage of the king of beasts and, entering it, bolted it fast against the incursion of the Queen of his household.

Who will charge him with rashness? The jaw of the lion is not more formidable than tongue of the woman of temper in a pet. Mrs. Caudle is a nuisance. Xantippe is a calamity. But when these two well-known characters are combined in one dear soul and she assumes the rôle of a warlike Semiramis, the domestic situation becomes truly critical. And when such a heroine, in unmistakable earnest, charges with iron prong upon the unfortunate husband, the man is simply doomed. The lion seems preferable to the Fury. And so he proved. The poor showman found that the magnanimity attributed by the ancient naturalists to the lion is no fable. The beast spared his prey when the latter sought his protection. Not so the—Beauty. She was not content to drive her husband into the jaws of the lion. Unable to continue her pursuit or reach her victim, she growled and brandished her iron rod at him and called him to come out, if he did not mean to offer himself a hearty dinner for his famished prisoner, whose company he had there sought. As he shewed no inclination to accept the challenge, even in the face of the terrible alternative presented to him, she, still unrelenting, kept raging and making faces at him and calling him names, especially vociferating, from time to time, "oh you coward!" We now understand why good old Mr. Punch cried out—
DONT!

ANCIENT INDIA AND INDIAN AUTHORSHIP.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—To the extreme left of religious orthodoxy is united in opposition the extreme left of heterodoxy. Those who hold by the old faith are afflicted, because they cannot find in the tree-trunk one niche, sanctified by the image of a saint, and because the dryads, all undraped, have here their haunt, and these people would, perhaps, rejoice to level to the ground with some consecrated ore the old, enchanted oak. Those who hold by the new faith, the apostles of liberalism, are angry, because they cannot appropriate it as a tree of liberty, nor even construct from its timber a barricade. In fact, the tree is too high; they cannot plant on its summit the bonnet rouge and dance the carmagnole at its foot. The public, in general, however, honor the old oak, because it stands erect in lordly independence, and fills the whole world with its perfume, its branches rising so majestically to the sky that it seems as if the stars are only the golden fruits of this wondrous tree. We cannot plant the bonnet rouge on the tree top; nor can Mr. Romesh Chunder Dutt, author of the "History of India" and other writers of his type either, because we all belong to the century of new progress and reform and are the children of our own times. India has been characterised by a certain habit of impulse and impetuous zeal in the realization of such unique convictions as Mr. Dutt and other typical Indo-English writers can understand. They appreciate greater spontaneity of thought and consequently of action and deem it loyalty to harden their hearts and dull their sensibilities in English fashion, against even that modicum of approval which might be consistent with such appreciation. The mechanical, metaphysical and scientific devices which have been forced upon their ill-bred tastes, have inflated their wisdom beyond the appearance of urbanity and candour. With a sense sure to detect the drift of society and events, streams of social tendency, the rise of the people, the varying and complex problems of the pressing future, they see no necessity of being worried by such questions of Ancient India as are not worth hearing. Their liberty of pure thought and expression, their method of action, much more imaginative than those of their bigoted conservative brethren, are, in all forms of logical activity, much surer of their results than any other, and, perhaps, they are the safest in the world. Yet when they choose deliberately to exercise their brains, there are unmistakable proofs that in practical realization of their intellectual beliefs, these qualities leave them in the lurch. Mr. Dutt is no doubt a humble citizen in the Republic of Letters. As a historian, he has to come in contact with diversities of mind. Subtle sources of sympathy open up before him in contrast with sources, not less subtle, of antipathy, and both of them are often interesting and instructive in the highest degree. To English minds, his production is tasteful and pleasant; to Hindoo minds, it is crude and unintelligible. If he examined his own imperfections, he would cease to be fastidious; if he restrained his scrupulosity, he would cease to be squeamish. Either the one way, or the other, he has compromised himself in making the ancient history of India a dry chronicle of dates and incidents existing in a mythical form. The English historian being an Englishman is quite qualified to narrate things and events in an intelligent manner, because he has the necessary intelligence to understand things and events as they happen in succession. The Indian historian in the present instance is not an Englishman like Sir W. Jones, Colebrooke, Elphinstone, James Mill, Orme, Ward, Professor Wilson, or Cowell, but an Indian; so that he should similarly possess all those qualities which characterise an Englishman treating of the history of England. But Mr. Dutt lacks the necessary faculties of correct observation and narrative. This shortcoming on his part is not intensified by racial prejudices and predilections and that sort of patriotism which influences the historian to see everything in him the reverse of everything which pertains to his neighbour, but by an anglicised taste which throws a veil over his inner nature, and makes him incapable of expressing his sentiments in a clear and unsophisticated form. He is predisposed to satisfy the advanced liberal thinkers, without believing that his orthodox countrymen have a right to appropriate a share in his vineyard. Like the powerful Voltaire, he is certainly not disposed to accept without question any of those beliefs that underlie our ancient historic lore. He has assailed it with every weapon and has endeavoured to overthrow it. The ephemeral lustre of unbelief is visible in the grotesque procession of new opinions that feed the taste of the Ultramontanes. If Voltaire succeeded in making a new era for himself, Mr. Dutt has none of that reckoning, because the basis of his opinions is utterly unfounded. He says:—"Let the reader attach no value to the names which are mostly myths or to the incidents which are mostly imaginary; let him only endeavour to draw from it a picture of Hindoo life in the Epic period, i. e., the period of Aryan expansion in the Gangetic valley" (vol. I, Book II, chapter II, p. 189). Possibly, he would attach the greatest "value" to Ragnor Lodbrog or Junius of a much later date. If he called them "myths," he could not surely draw from them a picture of English life in the two distinct periods of English history. There are some English historians who admit these characters as real; there are others who ignore them altogether. The names and incidents connected with the two epics are taken as "imaginary." The existence of Vycramadyta or Yudisur has been ignored. But Mr. Dutt cannot ignore that Belus reigned in Babylon (B. C. 1322) or that Semiramis reigned in Assyria (B. C. 2075). He talks of the Vedas as simply a collection of hymns, liturgies and rituals;—and the Pentateuch is a solid historical record! The Institutes of Manu contain no historical facts, or genealogies of kings, but it is simply an exposition of Aryan society and the peculiar divisions into which it had been separated;—and Ahab, King of Israel (B. C. 923) bears the impress of historical truth! Further on in Vol. III. Book V. Chap. VI., p. 283, the author states with a degree of complacency:—"The caste system in India has much to answer for; but its worst and most lamentable result is this permanent breach and disunion where there should have been fusion and union, this weakness and death, where there should have been national strength and life." A sorry reasoning this, showing the frantic liberalism of an uncouth Indian. It is useless to deny that the caste system is founded upon an exclusively social and religious basis. It is a combination of both, serving to maintain the professed religious faith, and apart from that faith, to uphold the decent moralities of social life. Caste restrictions cannot be withdrawn, as that would give place to the wildest and most uncontrollable license, which, by the Hindoo religion only, would be wholly unchecked. Caste discipline is an aid to preservation of the outwardly decent morality of the people and the observance of laws which no profound jurist would see abolished until, by a purer faith and diviner air, eliminated by astute intellects like those of Romesh Chunder and his fellow-brethren, its aims as well as its practical effects could be accomplished. "Fusion and union" "national strength and life" represent a higher ideal, no doubt, but socialism needs a much higher explanation. Its legitimate demands and nobler aspirations must be satisfied by measures founded on a juster and sounder principle. The socialistic heaven must continue to work so long as the framework of society, that is built upon the old, remains materially untouched. So that the day is far to seek of that "national strength and life" which Mr. Dutt looks wistfully on.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills.—Coughs, Influenza.—The soothing properties of these medicaments render them well worthy of trial in all diseases of the respiratory organs. In common colds and influenza the Pills, taken internally, and the ointment rubbed over the chest and throat, are exceedingly efficacious. When influenza is epidemic, this treatment is the easiest, safest and surest. Holloway's Pills purify the blood, remove all obstacles to its free circulation through the lungs, relieve the over-gorged air tubes, and render respiration free, without reducing the strength, irritating the nerves, or depressing the spirits; such are the ready means of escaping from suffering when afflicted with colds, coughs, bronchitis, and other chest complaints, by which the health of so many is seriously and permanently injured in most countries.

J.

JEANNE AND MARY.

BY MAURICE MONTEGUT.

[Translated for Reis and Rayyet from L'Echo de la Semaine.]

For the twelfth time I made the voyage between New York and Havre; and, as on the eleven previous occasions, I took my passage in the mail steamer the Saintonge, commanded by Captain La Pallue.

I had a partiality for the Saintonge; more than on any other ships, the table was comfortable, a thing important in a voyage; the cabins were in good order, the personnel amiable, the crew picked, and the Captain, a delightful man, who knew his business and had it at his fingers' ends, and was not for that a less jolly fellow. I loved that. On board the vessel, between the heavens and the water, I felt a veritable want of ambient sympathies; one only scowling look grieved me;—when I was obliged to consider it six times per hour during eight or ten days, this magnetic uneasiness was turned into an intercourse à la persécution. We were all nervous in our family. I admit this may be ridiculous, but it is incurable; every man has his foibles, is it not?

Four days after our departure from America, we came under a sky lighted by the sun from morning till evening and by the stars all the night, the wind blew softly, and the sea was like a female who rocked the cradle; we sang her the best songs. The passengers made a good figure. At the meal, in the dinner-hall, I had on my right and on my left two jolly and gay neighbours.

The good Saintonge on the march between the sky and the sea was like a little paradise, and many of the passengers desired to continue this voyage of dream for days still.

On the fourth day, at breakfast, the Captain said :—

"Ladies and gentlemen, this evening towards 10 o'clock, we will arrive at the middle of our route. We will find ourselves just at an equal distance between America and France, between the Old World and the New; then diner de gala, and, if the ladies like, some music after dinner. We will drink the health of the two countries, in thanking God for giving us a time truly favourable."

This petty discourse was received with a joyous uproar; and the cordiality of each augmented it for all.

All that day, a sort of fever ran among the passengers; the ladies pondered over it at their toilet; the men, the most grave among them, were naively joyous before the prospect of this unexpected fête.

It is to be remarked that we grow young again in a voyage: man is so little before the wide expanse of the sea and the height of heaven, that naturally he becomes once more an infant. For my own part, I remained calm. Eleven times already had I assisted at the diner de gala, at the improvisée fête, which celebrated the happy arrival of the paquebot at the middle of the route without any mishap. I knew it too well to be ruffled by it. But the happiness of others made me happy, and not to appear sad in the midst of so much joy, I affected to be prodigiously enchanted.

I walked along the deck, and when I passed before a group of Frenchmen, I sang—"Gai, gai, lari don, don lá!" Then ten paces farther on, near a clan of Americans, I shouted: "Hip! hip! hurrah!"

They remarked my gaiety and several times I had the pleasure of hearing behind me some voices say "I was an amiable man—a merry soul." What more to desire?

The hour of the expected dinner at last came. The table was splendidly served and La Pallue, in full dress, had the good air to preside between the two very jolly ladies of the passage, both of whom appeared in a low dress. Sunburnt, tall, broad, with eyes dry and glittering, our Captain was really a superb man.

We ate fast and drank much and the conversation became rather droll; but, as every one spoke at the same time, it became almost boisterous. To divert it, I proposed for discussion the superiority of the brunette over the blonde or vice versa. It so happened that, around the table, there were five brunettes and five blondes, partly equally balanced, who pressed their lips and kept silent. The Captain, whose opinion was asked on the matter, refused to express it with an exquisite tact, which extorted applause from the ladies of all colours. We praised him. He rose with the glass in hand. Then we toasted to you, to me, to all, and every time our enthusiasm increased. At dessert, we love our neighbours. Love opens the heart; this is the evangelical in the Devil. All of a sudden, La Pallue consulted his watch and rose up: "Ladies and gentlemen," he said, "in ten minutes we shall be at the precise point. Excuse me if I go out for an instant. Duty before all; I have some orders to give."

We bowed, he disappeared, and every one left his place; and, as the coffee was served, the men began to smoke; we cannot always be gallant.

Under an adorable moon of softness and melancholy, rolling on the blue carpet of the splendid sky, surrounded by the eternal stars, the black steamer on the blue sea advanced in silence, like a thing of life.

Midway on the stairs, I stopped myself. Above me on the foot bridge, I heard a loud voice, which disturbed the stillness of the night. I looked, and perceived the Captain. I came and heard him this time. At first, La Pallue turned to the back of the steamer towards America, and stretching out his arms, he cried :—"Till we meet again! In a month! dear Mary!" Then turning towards France, he shouted :—"In five days! Good morning, my Jeanne!"

Seeing me, the Captain was startled and then said—"Is it you, Monsieur Mézidon?"

"The same.....I came here to take a little fresh air. Are we near the dawn?"

"Yes, we are," said the Captain.

He looked at me; he divined, without doubt, that I had surprised him, for he asked :—

"Be frank; have you heard me?"

"Well! I did; I never lied."

"Then, Mézidon!" said he, "I owe you an explanation; you are almost a friend; you had made voyages twelve times with me and your fidelity to the Saintonge touched me profoundly. . . . Then I cried to the right 'till we meet again! Dear Mary!' and to the left 'Good morning, Jeanne!' This is the history of my life. It is about an hour at the table, you were discussing about the brunettes and blondes. My friend, the brunettes are divine, but the blondes are exquisite. I had always thought so. Then I had arranged my existence. Mary is blonde; Jeanne is brunette. Mary lives in New York; Jeanne resides in Havre. My life of voyages is divided between France and America. In each world, I have a femme who loves me, who expects me, and who thinks of me when I am away. I love both equally well. The human soul is vast enough for two loves. It is for these amours that I have this practice of giving a fête on this precise point of the streams, just in the middle of the Ocean which balances itself from the sides of America to the land of France. For here is the point of equilibrium of my heart, between memory and hope—between my two amours, followed from far by the one, and already waited for by the other.

"This is true," said I troubled, "Captain, you are a sage and a happy man, for all sages are happy. But at last a day will come when it will be necessary to choose—either to reside here or there, —in France or America, near Jeanne and far away from Mary, or near Mary and far away from Jeanne. . . . When you will no longer make voyages . . . in ten years—twenty years..."

"Oh!" said La Pallue, with a melancholy voice, showing me with a jesture the horizon of the sea, where a black cloud rose, "In our business, you see, we do not calculate so far, my friend."

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

STANZAS.*

BY C. A. KELLY.

To-morrow let Life's myriad cares
Sweep on in sullen flight,
O'er the vexed Ocean of our hearts,—
We will be glad to-night.

Royally robed and garland-crowned,
The happy guests recline,
Amid the banquet-splendour bright
Sparkles the sunny wine.

Into the soul the flute-tones melt,
The glorious love-chant glows,
And dark eyes flash beneath the brow
White as Cithæron's snows.

"The foot-fall of the girl I love,
Beats on the marble floor,
The laughter of the lips I love,
Floats rippling o'er and o'er.

"The murmur of my Love's sweet lips,
Is as the silver sea's,
That sleeps below the Moon all night
Kissed by the summer breeze.

"Ah, when we revel in those eyes,
And feel the soft cheek's touch,
Not even the thought of darker days
May vex us over much ;

R "When all too swift Time's chariot whirls,
Adown the steep of years,
Nor laughter of the lips we love,
Makes music in our ears."

UNDER THE CHESTNUT BOUGHS.

From the Clipper.

THERE'S a lad to-night far out at sea—
He may never be home again.
But, whether or not he comes back to me,
My heart is his own, as when
We were side by side on a day long fled,
When I heard his eager vows,
And blushed at the tender words he said
Under the chestnut boughs.

They tell me a sailor's heart is bound
By bonds that break at a breath :
Others, perhaps, such love have found,
But his will be mine till death.
And whether he sleeps beneath the wave
Or over the crest he ploughs,
I must always be true to the pledge I gave
Under the chestnut boughs.

It would grieve me less if the news were brought
That he died in a far-off sea.
Than if, sitting alone to-night, I thought
He could ever be false to me.
The lowland in winter garb is clad,
Snow covers the mountain brows :
No longer I stand beside my lad
Under the chestnut boughs.

But I feel that my love will come back some day
From over the stormy sea,
As loyal and true as when, going away,
He whispered farewell to me.
My heart goes out by the foam-flecked shore,
And never a doubt allows :
We shall surely stand, as we stood before,
Under the chestnut boughs.

THE RIVER.

The lights of the city glimmer
In the swift, black wave below ;
Like ghosts that flit in the gloaming
The white ships come and go.

White and dim and stately,
The good ships seaward go ;
Luck to you, Captains and sailors,
However the winds may blow !

White and dim and stately,
The good ships homeward throng ;
Welcome, Captains and sailors,
Your voyage has been long !

And sweethearts' eyes shall glisten,
And wives shall joyful be,
As the little children listen
To your tales of the stormy sea.

But what are the wrecks you tell of,
To the wreck of a love like mine ?—
The river murmurs and glitters :

NEWS AND OUR COMMENTS.

THERE is a piteous call from Cambay on the Imperial Government for a public enquiry into the administration of the late Dewan, with a view to compensation to those injured in the riot, and adequate measures for the amelioration of the condition of the people and for other reliefs.

NO successor to Lord Connemara has yet been announced. His retirement is greatly regretted at Madras. The Vizagapatam people are extremely loath to part with him. They are particularly anxious to have him back as their Governor, and they quote as their precedent the re-appointment of Lord Cornwallis who ruled over India from 1786 to 1793. But they reckon without their host. They may be assured that the Governor reciprocates their sentiment. But then—the grapes are sour—for him, as they proved to poor Dilke.

THE Bombay University, we are glad to record, has agreed to confer an honorary LL. D. degree on Professor Wordsworth. The Punjab University also honors the Director Colonel Holroyd of Public Instruction in the Punjab with its D. O. L.

ACCORDING to the Mandalay Herald, "the value of land in Mandalay is deteriorating; a lot situated at a busy corner of the town, purchased sometime ago at its full market value, will not now realize anything like the cost price." Is that the official view? Evidently, there is no Sir Henry Harrison in Burma.

THE Madras Mail having suggested that, if Mr. Gladstone were to have the nominating of Lord Connemara's successor in the Governorship of Madras, he would probably appoint Mr. Bradlaugh to the post, the Bengal Times remarks: "It depends very much upon what post Mr. Gladstone would select for Mr. Bradlaugh. Perhaps in Lord Connemara's gubernatorial establishment, a head shoe-black, or sirdar coolie might be needed, and for either of these two posts, Mr. Bradlaugh would have our recommendation." So much for the amenities of Anglo-Indian journalism! But why "Sirdar coolie" for a Governor? Are the old days of private trade and business come back? Have our satraps taken to the open cultivation of tea or coffee or indigo, over and above dabbling in stocks and estates on the sly?

And above all, why a shoe-black? One would have thought the Great Benighted House was in urgent need of detergents rather than colouring matter; certainly, soot and blackness abounded there. A laundress and a white-washer would be more to the purpose.

A NEAPOLITAN Prince having assumed the travelling name of Count of Pollenza, a poor but by no means humble Italian has sued him for trespass into his domains and taking what belongs to others. Signor Porto—for such is his name—exhibits a genealogy of his connection with the old Counts of Pollenza.

WE welcome a new member to the Fourth Estate in the True Light, a Christian organ started at Lahore. It is a small fortnightly but good, conducted by men of education and character, and of course written with accuracy and a sense of responsibility—all qualities not too common in the Indian press. Though a religious journal, it is not a grim affair. The conductors show a sneaking yearning for the liberties of secular publicists.

THE number of the True Light, No. 19, before us, we confess, is not altogether satisfactory, showing careless editing. The following note is a fair sample of the quality, but by how many errors, typographical and even grammatical, is it disfigured!

"The recklessness (to say the least) with which Mr. Bradlaugh makes assertions, with a view to disparage Christianity, may be judged from the following statement in the Natural (? National) Reformer for 31st August:

"Of 362 criminals imprisoned in Bombay during the past twelve months, only 50 have been heathens, the remaining 312 being Christians of various denominations—a state of things which seems to prove that the Christians of Bombay hold good works in even less esteem than [sic] did the compilers of our own Thirty-nine articles."

Turning to the 'Government Administration. [sic.] Report on the Bombay Jails' for the years [sic.] in question, the only place that [sic.] we find these figures 362 is in the analysis of those passing through the Jails of the Bombay Presidency, which run [sic.] as follows:—

Christians	362
Muhammadans	6,194
Hindus	10,457

That sort of treatment of other people's doxies—not in the Jolly Beggarly sense, of course—used to be confined to the saints. The sinners were more honest.

As a proof of the successful British administration of Cashmere, it is claimed that "During the last four official years the imports from that country have increased by about 19 per cent., notwithstanding a sudden decline representing 6½ lakhs of rupees in shawls, the fall in this item being due partly to the fact that this trade was formerly the subject of special encouragement in the late ruler's time, and in some measure to the Punjabis having become adepts in turning out well-got-up imitations of the genuine fabrics. Exports, on the other hand, have gone up by about 30 per cent., a noticeable feature under this heading being the enhanced demand for such commodities as metals, yarn, and dyeing materials, which seems to indicate considerable progress in the industrial arts, while the growing consumption of sugar, tea, tobacco and other superfluities would appear to point to a great improvement in the material condition of the people generally."

That is a poor and misleading account, neither true of the present nor true of the past. Thus, to talk of the Punjabis having mastered the secret of shawl-making ignores the great emigration of weavers from Cashmere.

COLONEL Nisbett made over charge of the British Residency in Cashmere to Surgeon-Major Joshua Duke, who makes it over to Colonel Prideaux from Jeypore.

COAL has been unearthed at Pinjore—a few miles from Kalka. The Geological Survey Department has been called up to pronounce its verdict on the find.

MR. W. S. Caine, M.P., of Abkari fame, now in India, has been elected a delegate from Sholapur to the approaching National Congress, to be held in this city. In the absence of a more desirable Chairman, he may be asked to guide the deliberations of the assembly. Whether he preside or not, or represent or not anybody but himself or any interest other than that of his party, he will be present, to give clat and weight to the ceremony, and afterwards report the business to the world. There will, of course, be an Abkari Resolution—somewhere.

THE Leprosy Commission out to India consist of Dr. B. N. Rake, M.D., Government Medical Officer and Medical Superintendent of the Trinidad Leper Asylum; Dr. A. A. Kanthank, M.B., B.Sc., F.R.C.S., late Midwifery Assistant, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London; and Dr. G. A. Buckmaster, M.D., formerly Radcliffe Fellow, Magdalen College, Oxford.

THE last rail of the Delhi-Umballa Section of the Delhi-Kalka Railway has been laid. The Section between Delhi and Karnal will be opened on New Year's day. The Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab travelled over a section of the Delhi-Kalka Railway on his way to Kapurthala to invest the Maharaja with full administrative powers.

THE Jodhpur-Bikanir line has commenced. Last week, the Maharaja of Bikanir, in the presence of the Political Agent, laid the foundation-stone of the railway station at Bikanir, at a distance of only a quarter of a mile eastwards from the city wall. The railway is expected to be complete in less than a twelvemonth.

THE Bengal-Nagpur Railway is nearing its completion. The end of December will see the end of plate-laying between Bilaspur and Kutni. The line may be open for goods traffic by the middle of January—and for passenger traffic by March next. But then the tunnel in the Saranda district will not be complete. There is, however, a diversion over which the material trains are now worked, and that may be utilized for passengers.

THE Sikh refugees at Pondicherry have, notwithstanding their intrigues in Maharaja Dhulip Singh's interest, been allowed, without molestation, to return to Delhi.

DURING the festivities at Agra, the Officiating Foreign Secretary Mr. Cunningham made a run to Gwalior. What may that mean?

MR. REES, the Acting Private Secretary to the Governor of Madras, has been put on special duty—to draw up an account of Lord Connamara's administration. He gains financially. "Aristotle" in the Madras Standard points out that Mr. Rees, while on special duty, will draw the pay of the Collector of the Nilgiris at Rs. 2,000 per mensem, the maximum deputation allowance of Rs. 10 per diem, and the local allowance Rs. 300 per mensem of the Persian and Hindustani Translator to Government, over the heads of his many seniors in the service.

PRESSED by the military authorities, the Government of Madras has accorded its sanction for the demolition of the outworks of Fort St. George—the Wallajah ravelin and two lunettes, to begin with. The General Officer Commanding the Madras District strongly urged that "their removal or even of a well selected few of these outworks would greatly improve the sanitation and ventilation of the Fort by securing a freer passage of air."

THE Novoié Vremia of St. Petersburg announces a new variety of the globe-trotter. There has arrived at Kiew a M. I. N. Balabouka, a tourist thoroughly independent of the progress of civilisation, who has travelled the world footing it all. He is but thirty-five years old and has already made above 42,500 kilom. (26,611 miles). He was to have commenced this month a new course of footing, kicking the peninsula of the Balkans as far as Mount Athos. Thence walking over the coast to Constantinople, he will proceed along the Bosphorus, and then cross over—by no miracle, we presume—to Jerusalem. Even at that Holy Shrine, the poor fellow will allow himself no rest. By way of the coasts of Syria and North Africa, he will proceed as far as Morocco, whence he will pass over to Spain, returning to Russia through Spain, France and Germany. This poor restless man must be a Hebrew—indeed the veritable Wandering Jew!

THE Acting Sessions Judge of Madura, Mr. J. Twigg, sentenced Mr. Robert Fischer, Barrister-at-law and a Lay Trustee of St. George's Church, Madura, who with his sister built the church and dedicated it to the Church of England, to simple imprisonment till the rising of the Court and a fine of Rs. 1,000. His offence is thus stated in the opening of the Judge's judgment:—

"Mr. Fischer, a Lay Trustee of St. George's Church, Madura, is charged under Section 68 of Act XV of 1872 as follows—that he 'on or about 7th May, 1890, at Madura, not being authorised under the Indian Christian Marriage Act XV of 1872 to solemnise a marriage, in the absence of a Marriage Registrar knowingly solemnised the marriage between Mr. Samuel Louis Ormsby and Miss Bibiana Elizabeth O'Connor both of whom are Christians.' The facts are briefly these: The Rev. Mr. Wansbrough, the Incumbent, was away on duty at Kudakanal in April and May last. In his absence the Native Pastor published the banns of the marriage, but left Madura three days before the marriage was to take place in spite of urgent requests that he would stay and perform the ceremony. In this emergency, recourse was had to Mr. Fischer who, as Lay Trustee, was taking the services in Mr. Wansbrough's absence. Mr. Fischer had doubts whether he was competent to celebrate a marriage, but thinking that since Laymen could christen and bury they might also in emergencies marry, and being fortified in this opinion by Mr. Johnson who had been for 17 or 18 years Marriage Registrar for the town of Madura, he came to the conclusion that he was competent to officiate and consented to do so. He wrote at once, however, to Mr. Wansbrough, detailing the circumstances and giving his reasons for consenting to perform the marriage. The letter reached Mr. Wansbrough in due course at midday on 7th May in time for him, had he wished, to have stopped the marriage by telegraph. He did not telegraph, however, as he was himself uncertain of the law on the subject. At 5 P.M., on the 7th May, Mr. Fischer solemnised the marriage in St. George's Church according to the Church of England ritual. Mr. Johnson was present—not as Marriage Registrar, but as uncle of the bride to give her away."

The trial commenced on the 3rd instant and, as befitted the position of the accused, continued the whole of that day and the next. Mr. M. S. Narayanasami Iyer, B.A., B.L., Public Prosecutor, Madura, prosecuted, and Mr. H. G. Wedderburn, Barrister-at-law of Madras, assisted by Mr. J. L. Pole, Barrister-at-law, and Mr. John Freach, First Grade Pleader, Madura, defended the accused. The assessors were Messrs. M. Venkatasami Naidu and O. Vencatavarada Rao. The Judge took one day to consider his judgment which he delivered on the fourth day. The section of the law quoted runs thus:—

"Whoever, not being authorized under this Act to solemnize a marriage in the absence of a Marriage Registrar of the District in which such marriage is solemnized, knowingly solemnizes a marriage between persons one or both of whom is or are a Christian or Christians, shall be punished with imprisonment which may extend to ten years, or (in lieu of a sentence of imprisonment for seven years or upwards) with transportation for a term of not less than seven years, and not exceeding ten years, or, if the offender be an European or American, with penal servitude according to the provisions of Act XXIV of 1855 (to substitute penal servitude for the punishment of transportation in respect of European and American convicts, and to amend the law relating to the removal of such convicts), and shall also be liable to fine."

The defence did not deny the facts, but contended that

"(1.) Admitting that Mr. Fischer was not authorised, the solemnisation by him of the marriage according to the ritual of the Church of England does not fall within purview of Section 68, as it was not what may be called a Registrar's marriage according to Section 5, Clause 4, to which alone the section refers, (11.) 'Knowingly' means knowing that he was not authorised and that he was doing wrong and Mr. Fischer did not act with such knowledge."

The Assessors gave their opinion that Mr. Fischer was not authorized; that he solemnized the marriage; that when doing so he knew what he was doing, and that the parties were Christians, but not that he was not authorized, or that he was doing what was wrong. The Judge was of opinion that criminal intention was not necessary for conviction and found Mr. Fischer guilty. Although finding against the accused, the Judge was not for visiting him with the severe punishment of the law. The order for imprisonment was barely nominal. The court rose, although it was not time for rising, as soon as the order was made, to allow Mr. Fischer to depart, and returned immediately to resume work.

The case has gone up to the High Court in appeal.

We must not omit to mention that the Marriage Registrar, Mr. Joseph Johnson, the uncle of the bride who gave her away, is being prosecuted for abetment. The parties were re-married by the Revd. Frederick Ray Wansbrough on the 4th August. The question remains, Whether the parties were man and wife from the 7th May to the 4th August?

IN memory of the visits of the Viceroy and the Lieutenant-Governor to Patiala, the Mahomedan Prime Minister of that State and his brother have each founded a gold medal in the Khalsa College for Sikhs.

THE Head Clerk and Accountant Rajender Coomar Guho of the City Moorshedabad Municipality, is being criminally prosecuted for receiving commission on goods purchased at Calcutta. The firms which had supplied the goods were examined by Commission. As usual in such cases, they all denied the payment. A single tradesman proved truthful, however, and proved the charge. We wish the other shops might be punished by all municipalities availing themselves.

THERE is an outcry against the Berhampore municipality for its recent prosecutions for burial of Hindu infants within its jurisdiction. There is no recognized place for such disposal of the Hindu infantine dead, while religion and custom prescribe their burial and not cremation.

NOTES, LEADERETTES, AND OUR OWN NEWS.

PARLIAMENT reopened on the 25th, at 1-50 P.M. The Speech from the Throne breathed Peace. The relations with all Foreign Powers continue to be friendly and the securities of peace remain undiminished. Her Majesty deeply regrets the potatoe famine in Ireland and the distress that threatens the Western counties, to avert which steps have already been taken. The legislative measures announced are the Land Purchase Bill, a Bill for augmenting the number of small owners to increase contentment and diminish political disorder in Ireland, a Tithes Bill, and a Bill for lessening the burden of compulsory education on the poor. Time permitting, recent experience is all the other way—other measures named will be introduced, including the Irish County Councils and the Nomination of a Public Trustee.

The same night, the Lords voted the address in reply. Lord Salisbury deplored the horrors perpetrated in Africa, but said they were past recall or remedy, as the author of the charges was not a British subject and the parties accused were dead. The gentlemen of the Lower House, as a new departure, passed a resolution of thanks by way of voting the Address, without proposing any amendments.

Mr. Smith announced in the House of Commons that the whole time of the House would be demanded until the Irish Land Purchase

Bill and the Tithes Bill had been read a second time.

On the 26th, Mr. Bradlaugh's India Councils Bill was read for the first time. He has abandoned his old Bill and has drawn up his second on the lines of the Government Bill passed by the Upper House last session. That Bill is already before the Indian public. It is a skilful compromise. It retains the principle of election, of course, but is withal a moderate and rational measure. There was also read the same night a Roman Catholic Disabilities Bill introduced by Mr. Gladstone, extending to a Catholic the privilege of becoming Lord High Chancellor of England and Viceroy of Ireland. It will, of course, pass the Lower House easily enough. The real fighting will be in the Lords, but it will pass there too, after all. Such nonsense cannot last. Such injustice is an anomaly in modern England. In fact the whole Settlement of the vaunted Revolution is an anachronism and must be abandoned in toto. A Roman Catholic may yet sit on the British Throne, unless that piece of state furniture be in the meantime swept away. Stranger things have happened in our day.

MR. Parnell still sticks to the leadership of his party. Mr. Gladstone advised him, through Mr. Morley, to offer his resignation following his own precedent after the Phoenix Park murders. The Parnellite party re-elected the Irish leader their Chairman. They meet again to consider Mr. Gladstone's advice. Mr. Gladstone threatens to withdraw his alliance with the Parnellites, unless Mr. Parnell retires. Mr. Parnell is said to be resolved, and he does not retire until his party pass a direct vote of want of confidence in him. The party hesitates.

THE King William III. of the Netherlands died—of uræmia—on the morning of the 23rd November. He was born on the 19th February 1817, and ascended the throne on the 17th March 1849. He first married in 1839 Princess Sophie, the second daughter of King Wilhelm I of Württemberg, of about the same age with himself, who dying on the 3rd June 1877, His Majesty married a second time in 1879 Queen Emma, born in 1859, daughter of Prince George Victor of Waldeck. She bore him, on the 31st August 1880, a daughter Princess Wilhelminia.

THE head and front of the Bishop of Lincoln's offending, after the persecution of several months, seems to be that he signed the cross at the mantra of absolution and blessing. This is an innovation which the Archbishop of Canterbury pronounces unjustifiable. His Grace's judgment on the other points are generally favorable to the Bishop. We presume the Bishop did not misplace the table, nor made a mess of the millinery.

THE Czarewitch arrived at Cairo on the 23rd. His Imperial Highness was received on the platform by General Dormer and Sir Evelyn Baring with the Egyptian guard of honour. The streets leading to the Russian Agency were lined with the Royal Irish and Dorsetshire Regiments. Visits were exchanged with the Khedive the same afternoon.

NOTWITHSTANDING proclamation, they held a procession at Enniscorthy in memory of the "Manchester Martyrs." The police resented this disobedience. They charged the mob, and, injuring several of the units, dispersed the crowd.

HEAVY rains and severe storms have flooded the greater part of the workings of the Manchester Ship Canal, causing great damage.

AN M. P., Mr. William Beckett, for Bassetlaw, while walking on the railway line near Winborne, was knocked down and killed by a passing train.

THE Queen's Bench has given a rude shock to the progress of female emancipation. That Court has fined Miss Cobden £125 and costs for sitting in the County Council.

WHILE in England they are recovering from the financial scare of the Baring Brothers, the bourse in Buenos Ayres is in a state of tumult. The premium on gold has gone up to 250, and several banks have shut up shop.

OUR suspicions have proved true. Lord Connemara resigns the Governorship of Madras on account of the Divorce proceedings in England. Lady Connemara has obtained a decree nisi against him. Sir James Hannen was satisfied, from the uncontradicted evidence of the petitioner, of cruelty and adultery on the part of the respondent.

IN view of the gold speculations of the day, we publish elsewhere the Government order on the connection of public servants with land-holding and commercial speculation in India. That order is dated 13th May 1885. In December last year, Government drew the attention of heads of Departments to the said order, at the same time calling upon the officers in superior service to furnish statements showing the landed property owned by them in their respective Provinces, or in which they may have any interest, or which may be held by, and managed by, their wives or other members of their families living with, and in any way dependent on, them. It was further pointed out that such a register should be maintained in each office. Candidates for Government employment should also be asked to furnish the information before appointment.

It is the age of pinchbeck and palaver. It is of course the age of steam and locomotion. Hence it has naturally given birth to great meetings of men from different places and distances, who strive to outtalk one another—meetings with a distinct tendency to periodicity. In India we have had some wellknown conventions of the kind. First, the political Congress with its five meetings, then the Social Conference with its several sittings. Not to mention the numerous minor or sectional organizations, the most important of which is the Educational Conference of Sir Syud Ahmad Khan, there has just now sprung up a religious Congress. It is an exclusive affair, of course, being confined to Hindus. The Bharat Dharma Mahamandal, as it is called, met at Delhi, under the presidency of our Bengali compatriot the young Zemindar of Taherpur, Raja Soshi Sekhoheswar Roy. The Bania element, we believe, predominated, though there was enough of holy Brahmanhood in attendance. The palaver was not brilliant, but there could be no question about the sincerity of faith of most of those forming the assembly. The chances of any contretemps were reduced to a minimum when the Baboo was unanimously called to the chair.

The meeting decried Government interference in socio-religious matters, such as raising the age of consent, &c. At the same time, they denounced "the evil custom of demanding exorbitant money in matrimonial transactions and extravagance in marriage expenses, as being contrary to the tenor of the Dharma Shastras." The tendency to demand money is on the increase. It also indirectly helps to raise the marriageable age of girls. The curious part of the whole affair is that those who condemn the practice are not unoften the most unblushing sinners. In the decay of healthy public opinion in Hindu society, the sanctions of the Shasters are powerless to control the commercial instincts. Persons of education and position are not ashamed to trade on their sons in the marriage market.

THE Census Officer in Calcutta, Mr. H. F. T. Maguire, is deliberately sowing cheap and ought not to make noses if at harvest he has only nasty. He has reported that the total cost of the operations will not exceed Rs. 30,000, as he shows by a detailed statement. Of this he has just now called for Rs. 20,000.

Mr. Maguire, however, is liberality itself before the Census scare-crow down South. If in Bengal we order the matter cheap, in Madras they manage it simply nil. The sum fixed by Mr. Maguire for the remuneration of an enumerator is Rs. 10. The Superintendent of Census Operations, Madras has notified, that all who do good work as enumerators without payment, will be considered to have a preferential claim to employment as tabulators in the abstracting offices at Madras, Bangalore, Calicut and Berhampore, provided they are also otherwise qualified, but no qualifying examinations are requisite. An appropriate name for such an imposing board is "abstracting office," and a worthy Superintendent of abstracting operations is this officer! Enumeration is very far from a joke. It is real work, of discrimination, and no small difficulty, performed not in the quiet corner of a snug office, but requiring constant moving about, demanding intelligence, local knowledge, local popularity, conciliation and tact, some power of organization, an executive head, and what not. In an ignorant community, he is the referee of hundreds explaining difficulties, removing doubts, allaying suspicions. He is the great little unit in the matter—the corner-stone of the huge fabric. The worth of the census will depend on his good faith and good sense. And he is the only labourer in the business who is not worthy of his hire. He alone is to go unpaid, for all his toil and moil and all his anxieties extending through months. We stand aghast at the coolness of the proposition. Nor is it a poor honorary magistrate who has drudged for years in the service of the state without so much as empty recognition that is the author of this original mode of uncouth administration. The unblushing atrocity of the scheme will be appreciated when one remembers that we owe it to the genius of the most pampered Service in the universe. The schemers are thorough political economists, if imperfect moral philosophers. They depend upon the poverty of the land to get the galley-slaves they require. They will get them. But what is the value of such service—in such a delicate matter? It is noteworthy that though the schemers have not conscience enough for justice to others, they have a child-like faith in the virtue of their victims. The Government had better pause before leaving the accuracy of the Census at the mercy of an army of starving pariah dogs burning under a sense of injustice.

RATHER too much is being made of a recent exhibition of international soft sawder and human nature.

At the banquet of the British Iron and Steel Institute at New York, the American General Sherman, in replying to the toast of his health, thus gave expression to his cousinly affection for the British:—

"We love the Queen as much as do our English brothers. To you she is a Queen, and to us she is a woman and a mother. Our hearts throb with the same emotions; we are reared upon the same food; we read the same Bible and the same books. . . England need never fear force, for if there should be any trouble America would come over and take a hand."

That "taking a hand" may be believed, but the question is—in what sense, and to what purpose? Where was your feeling heart, O republican hero, or what were your emotions when thou madest war on the South and carried fire and sword into its States and desolated the fairest Provinces? Were not the Southerners brothers too? Were they reared on any other food than what thou wert fed upon? Did they not read the same Bible and the same books? And is History a lie, and are the annals of the American Revolution all a fraud? Was the stamp tax a myth? What! was it on a deviation in diet, or a theological schism that the Colonies set their faces against the Home Government? Was it for a difference in ethical teaching or æsthetical taste that mother state and children fell out? Were there a Babel of tongues and a confusion of creeds that led to war and final separation between members of the same nation or body politic?

It may be expedient for grown up men to indulge in such "chaff." The wonder is that men of the world should be taken in by it. People who ought to know better, and even thoughtful publicists are continually deceiving themselves into the notion that a community of language and worship is the chief binding force in political affairs. It is not. History is witness through all ages and in all lands. And facts in support of its teaching stare us on all sides at this moment. Self-interest and passion are always mightier than lingual and religious fraternity. Not to go to the Europe of the French Revolution and the First Empire, contemporary annals furnish striking instances. What a spectacle was that of three Christian Powers—representatives of the Crusaders of old—joining in the Crescentade of Turkey and draining their resources and the best blood of their peoples in the desperate game of maintaining Islam in the European Continent in the heart of Christendom! Times have a good deal changed since then, and France in her stress shakes Russia warmly by the hand over the heads of Central Europe, still England maintains a sneaking fondness for the Sublime Porte. It is, as always, a fondness of interest—a match of convenience. And so long as England understands her own good she will stick to her noble ally. In similar pursuit of selfish views, Italy has discarded not only her sister in race and speech but also her greatest political benefactor, France, to hug to her bosom the sandals of the Imperial Teutonic virago, Germany. General Sherman's own country, with her Teutonic and Celtic population, her republican government and a constitution which precludes a foreign policy and forbids territorial ambition, is the best disposed of all states to the Cossack Empire. No international regard is more real than this entente cordiale. And yet upon sentimental grounds it might be pooh-poohed.

It is satisfactory to find that at least two of the Bengal Taluqdars have won the thanks of the Lieutenant-Governor of the N.W. Provinces. Sir Auckland Colvin has caused the acknowledgments of Government to be conveyed to Sir Radha Prasad Sing Bahadoor, K.C.I.E., of Doomraon, and Maharani Surnomoyi, C.I., of Cossim-Bazar, for their subscriptions for the relief of sufferers from the late floods in the Billia district. These naïve magnates have shown a good example. Narrowness, intellectual and moral, is the distinctive failing of our untravelling people. Until we can rise to a higher altitude of consciousness as the subjects of a common polity, we shall not be fit for anything like political self-government, dozen Congresses notwithstanding. It is all very well to talk of the Indian nation, but talk should be followed by such visible tokens of sympathy as the Maharaja and the Maharani have given. Herein at any rate, the public will see the advantage of having Old Indians for Governors of Provinces.

We are far from suggesting that these two are the only instances of ultra provincial charity among our countrymen. Such an insinuation would be a libel on a people essentially and eminently charitable. It was most unfair to Bombay, and particularly to the Parsees. It would be unjust to the good Nawab Bahadoor of Moorshedabad. Above all, it would be an offence against the House of Vizianagram. The Maharajas and Maharanis of Vizianagram have always stood in the front of all Indians for large and large-minded liberality, and sympathetic charity, public and private, irrespective of creed or caste, of Presidency or Province, country or nation. Not India only but other countries also have benefitted from the open-handedness of this family. The late Maharaja's benefactions are well-known. And he has left a worthy Consort and a worthy son to continue his example.

THE administration of Lord Curzon has brought to notice at least one literary member of the local Civil Service, whom he made his Private Secretary and who has done him a yeoman's service as His Excellency's Historiographer. Mr. Rees is in Madras what Dr. W. W. Hunter was in Bengal. Like the veteran knight of the pen, this literary free lance has early taken an interest in Hindu social reform, but unlike his great prototype's his is an antagonistic interest. He has contributed to the Nineteenth Century an article on the subject in which he does his best to discredit the present demand for immediate legislation. The agitation in England has been so one-sided that Mr. Rees deserves the best thanks of the conservatives for his thorough-going championship of their cause. The reformers, representing the active intelligence of both countries, are quite able to defend themselves. Indeed, they have promptly answered Mr. Rees through Mrs. Fawcett in the Contemporary. Here, in the East, where the reforms are to be carried out, the Indian Spectator—Mr. Malabar's organ in Bombay—of course recognises the gravity of the omen that has thus made its appearance, and takes care early to neutralise its baleful effects. In a long, but not too long, article of great ability, bristling with facts and arguments and not a few telling sarcasms, our contemporary has exhaustively reviewed the essay, exposing Mr. Rees' pretensions and answering him at all points. On such a subject the native has an obvious advantage over the foreigner. Here, besides, the difference between the magazinist and the newspaper publicist was the difference between the man who reads up his subject for the occasion and the man who has made it the business of his life. We shall not try to repeat the substance of five columns of condensed matter—not in the printer's sense only—but will just indicate by one specimen the quality of the article. Mr. Rees makes much of a letter from a Yogi with which he finishes his argument against reform. This Yogi business is getting to be a troublesome nuisance. The Indian Spectator beautifully demolishes Mr. Rees' sacred ally. After showing up the inconsistencies of this English-speaking Hindu sage, our contemporary thus disposes of this new literary machinery in Indian polemics:—

"Mr. Rees might have known that a real Yogi never holds commune with men, not even with Private Secretaries. He might also have known, what is not unknown to the average Police officer, that some of these Yogis are whilom Bhagis who, having 'sown their wild oats,' having become bankrupts in spirit and in substance, set up for Yoga practice. We have nothing to say against this Yogi who may be a very worthy person; but that he was formerly a lawyer rather disturbs one's confidence in his Yoga, which is further shaken by his language, that of a clever but disconsolate theosophist."

Verily, there is genius in that epithet! What a permanent life-like portrait is given in that simple but suggestive tracing! In Madras—the Head-quarters of Theosophy—it must be a biographic index-finger. There they would not have much difficulty in identifying the modern Rishi, as Disconsolate, not daring to complain,

Silent he wandered by the sounding main.

It is not the true old Hindu Yogi of which the letter is the expression, but more probably the reaction of a new fangled theosophy.

Be that as it may, there is great shrewdness of observation and point in the general remark on the reactionary tendencies of not a few of our people in these days, who know no mean between the most grotesque Anglo-mania and the most outrageous Rishiism.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Statesman writes from Furreedpore of the appearance of a new and formidable enemy in Eastern Bengal, to fill the cup of the peasant to the brim. He reports a great flight of locusts which passed over the District town in the afternoon of the 21st. He is a man of observation, and gives a rather interesting account. The enemy came sweeping from the south-west in dense columns, 30 to 40 feet deep and some 300 to 400 feet broad, and proceeded lustily, singing their triumphant march with a solemn ringing sound, and dropping liquid like drizzling rain, due north-east. This continued in the station till 3 O'clock in the day. Towards evening—after certainly an hour and a half's interval—there was another raid, not by a fresh host, but from the rear by the same flight that had passed before. It seems that the great Padma had arrested their march. That may sound Hibernian, considering that it was not a case of men or creeping reptiles or worms, or beasts of the field or forest or of any creatures pinned to the earth. And yet so it is. It is one of the mysteries of Creation. Science certainly has not yet fathomed all the properties of the omnipresent liquid. Water is not mere hydrogen and oxygen; at any rate, the combination of these gases in due proportions invests it with an occult presence. A narrow piece of water has been known to stop the progress of a plague. Why the subtle poison that travels in the air should be so arrested, who can tell? What wonder that a great river should scare the poor locusts and make them at least hesitate in their flight. As a matter of fact, these locusts were on the 21st stopped by the sight of the broad Ganges spread majestically across their line of march. They could have crossed it had they so willed it, but they thought it due to the genius of the River to show some respect. So they fell back upon the town. Such is the prestige of numbers that the feathery tribes which, as by instinct warned, had assembled at noon in anticipation of danger, all dispersed to thin air, as it were, no sooner the legion of the winged Lilliputians appeared. All the numberless kites and other birds, great and small, of prey or of song, that erewhile were noisily flying about, or hovering significantly, or making strategic movements in readiness for the coming opportunity, simply "skeddaddled" on the appearance of the invaders, without firing a shot, or made a general retreat to the upper regions, leaving the field below to the foe, and making not a single capture. The very crows, usually so shameless, were dumbfound and, like rural Congress orators in presence of a magistrate, lost their prime faculty, the "gift of the gab."

THE sensation of the week in Calcutta was a pitched battle in the heart of the city, in its busiest and most crowded part. All sorts of rumours agitated the citizens on Tuesday. Luckily, the contest was brief, and no cold steel was employed and no powder burnt.

Hitherto, the Suleiman Khyel of Cabool have been the chief Afghan traders in Bengal. They bear deadly enmity to the Kharotee clan. Luckily, a member of the latter had been a rara avis in this city. Recently, however, the Kharotees have grown in numbers to the indignation and, indeed, consternation of the Suleimans, who are trying all possible means to keep them out. To the rude, untutored Cabooler, such ways are not many. They chiefly rely on their muscular strength to gain their ends. The others are not a whit less combative. Accordingly, both sides went to battle on Tuesday morning to try their respective strength. The battle field was at Khenraputty in Burrabazar. No arms being allowed under the wise sway and crushing peace of England, sticks of sorts did the duty of rifles and revolvers. At last, the fight proving bloody, a knowing Afghan intervened with the Koran in hand and, appealing to the sacred book, brought the fray to an end. Such is the faith and fidelity of this brave people that, no sooner the name "Koran" was heard than the combatants at once desisted, and, seeing the sacred volume, bowed to it and left the field in quiet. The Police of course did not enter appearance on the scene till the fight was over, to find the field strewn with broken heads and limbs. They proceeded in all their strength, reserve and all, mounted and foot, Holloway's Pills and Ointment.—Soldiers and Sailors.—These well-known and easily used remedies are especially serviceable and convenient for those who, like soldiers and sailors, are exposed to great changes of climate, and the hardships inseparable from their calling. Many of the diseases engendered in the system from these and other untoward causes can be checked and controlled by attention at their onset, and in Holloway's remedies will be found a ready means of relief, without hindrance from duty. Many a man is invalidated and rendered more or less a burden to himself and friends from neglect of the early symptoms of his complaint, which calamity might be averted by timely resort to the use of Holloway's Pills and Ointment.

and made several arrests and a brave show—as if they were ready to cut off the Ameer's head. Even then at the fag end, it was tough work for them. The offenders against Her Majesty's peace were no Bengalis but all true-born Afghans, careless of life or consequences. More by persuasion than by force, the Police did what remained for them to do. The Commissioner himself was there, or else probably the fight would have been renewed between the Afghans on the one hand and the Police on the other. Some of the leaders of both the Khyels were the next day placed before Syed Ameer Hossein Khan Bahadoor, the Northern Division Magistrate. The cases stand adjourned. We hope our good magistrate will pass as successfully through the ordeal of these Caboolers as he did through the Sikh invasion of his bench at Alipore.

SIR Charles Elliott is already in possession of the loyalty of the capital, before he has been formally installed as Lieutenant-Governor. The Calcutta Corporation gives him a steamer party to Barrackpore to the Water Works on the 8th December.

SIR Steuart Bayley makes over charge on the 17th December. Preparations are making for a public farewell to the retiring Lieutenant-Governor. It has been decided to present him an address. There will be an Evening Party at the Town Hall. The permanent memorial will take the form of a portrait if not something costlier. There will be the usual Service Dinner, of course. The Chamber of Commerce, who ought to be most grateful to him for his latest attitude on the Doorga Pooja holiday question, keep away from the demonstration. But the Behar Planters join the Behar Zemindars in bidding good bye to their Own Governor. Sir Steuart is best appreciated where he is best known, and we hope Behar will not be satisfied with a piece of canvas for a permanent memento.

It will be satisfactory to those who wish for a continuity of the methods and traditions of the present eminently conscientious and sympathetic rule, that the Bengal Chief Secretary does not go out with his Chief. Sir John Ware Edgar continues as Chief Secretary. Sir Charles Elliott could scarcely find a more experienced or wiser Vizier or one so independent of party, and yet in such thorough touch with the people and with public opinion.

EDUCATION IN BENGAL LAST YEAR.

SIR Alfred Croft's last report is of more than ordinary value. Under orders of Government prescribing that in alternate years fuller explanations of details should be given, it embodies a large amount of information, and the general principles which regulate the operations of the Education Department are clearly elucidated. In a recent issue, we noticed the subject of primary education and the policy which has now been laid down with respect to it. That principle is one which has our warmest approval, and indeed we may say without vanity we have all through fought for its adoption, and are therefore especially gratified at its ultimate triumph. The administration of primary education has now, under the scheme of Local Self-Government, been vested in the District Boards, and these Boards are now being initiated in a work new and rather foreign to them. So far they have not succeeded in discharging this new responsibility well. The Government Resolution on Sir Alfred's report notices this point in the following terms:—

"The Director has, in a very proper spirit, as a friendly critic, drawn attention to some shortcomings in the work of certain District Boards. It is through no fault on their part that their educational operations have in some cases been hampered for want of funds, the income from ferries and pounds not having kept pace with their educational requirements. But they must be held responsible for such matters as great delay in the despatch of business, especially in disposing of reward bills and in making up examination results, irregularities in the method of accounting for public money, misapplication of the primary grant, or failure to spend fully the allotments for primary education. These are matters which the District Boards are quite capable of correcting for themselves. It is not a matter for surprise that their control and management of middle schools of various classes is less efficient than when the work was performed by high officers of the Education Department. Sir Alfred Croft rightly observes that this decline in efficiency is part of the necessary price paid for Local Self-Government. The policy of entrusting District Boards with certain educational work, in which the Department has given them its steady support, has been deliberately adopted for reasons which have often been stated, and improvement can only be obtained by perseverance. The transfer of large educational powers to Local, as distinguished from District, Boards appears to have been prematurely attempted in some places."

The progress of higher education, as judged by numbers, is altogether gratifying. There has been, during the last three years, an increase of nine private Colleges, making the total 38. The demand for University education is steadily increasing, and the development of private enterprise to meet this demand also keeps pace. To Sir Alfred Croft these are reassuring indications of progress. He says that "the policy of the day clearly tends more and more towards the concentration of higher educational effort in the Presidency College and the gradual retirement of Government from the outlying colleges where private enterprise may in time be trusted to take up the work." We have no objection to the policy with the very wise limitations with which Sir Alfred Croft's great experience of the subject has led him to hedge it in. The retirement of Government from the field can only be very gradual as a matter of fact, if the policy is to be carried out without serious disruption of the work.

Secondary education does not show any marked expansion. This is explained as due to an unnecessary multiplication of schools and an unhealthy competition among them. But we suspect there is another more potent cause at work, namely, inadequacy of funds. These schools are maintainable at a scale of expenditure above the means of extra-urban people, and can only be set up and kept alive with aid from the Government. But the funds at the disposal of the Department for this purpose are, so far as we are aware, not commensurate or at any rate not expansive. New grants are hard to obtain, and old ones are often cancelled or reduced. The Government admits that, while the Education Commission recommended that a periodically increasing provision should be made in the education budget for the expansion of aided schools, financial exigencies and the needs of primary education have prevented compliance with this policy. Now that Primary Education is to be organised upon a new basis, we trust secondary schools will not be starved for its sake.

The subject of discipline and moral training continues to receive the attention of the Government. The Resolution has the following summary of measures adopted or to be adopted towards their improvement:—

"Measures have been adopted during the year for giving effect to the views of the Government of India in regard to discipline in schools and colleges. The summary of these measures given in the Director's report hardly admits of further condensation, but some of the more important steps taken deserve notice. The establishment of a special training college for teachers has been sanctioned and will be carried out as soon as funds are forthcoming. Principals of Government colleges were addressed on the subject of elevating the moral tone of the students, and the Lieutenant-Governor drew attention to the many opportunities which the study of ethics, and other occasions of college life, afforded to Professors for moral instruction of a character such as to influence their pupils and make a permanent impression. The adoption of suitable moral text-books for schools of all classes has been kept in view; and the example set by the University in preparing a book of selections for the Entrance Examination is to be followed so as to meet the requirements not only of the junior classes of high schools, but also of middle and primary schools through the medium of works in the vernacular. The maintenance in every school of conduct registers, with a record of the head-master's opinion of each boy's character and behaviour, based upon personal knowledge, has been insisted upon, and special attention is to be paid to the entries in the conduct registers of candidates for employment in Government offices.

The appointment of monitors under proper safeguards has been authorized, and the system is being tried in institutions to which hostels are attached. More recently these monitors or prefects have been entrusted to a limited extent with punitive powers. A rule has been issued with the object of minimising the evil of having in the same class grown-up lads and little children. The attention of school authorities has been drawn to the necessity of encouraging outdoor games and exercises, on the understanding that no attempt should be made to create a race of acrobats out of our students. Should physical exercise in other forms not be popular, some form of drill is, under the orders of the Government of India, to be compulsory. The Director adds: "It is believed that schools at the sadder stations will find no difficulty in obtaining a person able, if necessary, to give instruction in drill; but such exercises as parallel bars, dumb-bells, cricket, football and indigenous games, including athletic sports, running, jumping, &c., are more to be commanded and more likely to be generally acceptable. It has been explained that no reasonable outlay will be refused for the purpose of setting up gymnastic appliances, or of aiding cricket and football clubs." As to discipline, it is admitted that the more closely a school is connected with the Department, the better is its discipline, and in most cases it is not so much the absence of morality as of good manners in the boys and the junior teachers that requires to be corrected. Defiance of authority, indifference if not positive disrespect, a rule offhand manner, showing no sign of respect to a superior, are sights too common in many schools. Cases of actual misbehaviour towards teachers are said to be happily rare; but they are entirely absent, and the punishment of rustication for a year or more has had a salutary effect. Cases of grave misconduct on the part of teachers themselves are not wanting; and to some extent the unhealthy state of public opinion in regard to discipline gives rise to troubles in school management. The opening of a new school as a money speculation, near an old and established institution, often has the effect of disorganising school discipline in the locality for a time. Sir A. Croft considers that it is very desirable that certificates should be refused to schools that defy the rules of discipline, or to those that are opened in a mere spirit of opposition and rivalry to other non-Government schools, without any prospect of permanence and to the injury of sound education. The Lieutenant-Governor concurs in these views, and will be prepared to receive definite suggestions on the subject. It is very satisfactory to learn that the operation of the transfer rules has been entirely wholesome, and that the revised rules recently issued are likely to check many irregularities that formerly prevailed. Simple rules for the transfer of pupils in middle and primary schools, in the spirit of those approved by Government for high schools, are being framed. Having regard to these measures, the Lieutenant-Governor is of opinion that a very considerable advance has been made in the direction desired by the Government of India. The policy indicated has had his entire concurrence and support; he has not expected anything but gradual improvement, and he looks to the co-operation of all officers of the Department in the endeavour to reform the whole tone of education in Bengal on the lines laid down by the highest authority."

Several of these measures are destined to be inoperative. They will, so long as the interest in the subject is fresh, furnish a topic for discussion in annual reports and resolutions, but never emerge into the region of practical politics. The idea of a Training College is a mistake, and, if carried out, will entail a waste of money which could be more usefully employed. Character registers will soon fall into disuse, and the monitor system break down in practice. The multiplication of rules is on principle to be avoided. The enforcement of them will involve an extent of clerical labor on school authorities which must interfere with their more important work of teaching. The adoption of moral text-books, like Mr. Tawney's Entrance Course, is likely to be financially fruitful. Beyond this, it has little to recommend it. The character of the compilations judged by the work to hand differs little from that of those which are to be superseded, even from a moral point of view. The inter-school rules, though attended with hardship in some cases, are on the whole necessary. The fee, however, might be reduced in bonâ fide cases of transfer justified by circumstances.

THE BENGAL MUNICIPALITIES.

ABOVE the signature of Mr. Secretary Cotton appears, in this week's official Gazette, a lengthy review of the working of the Bengal municipalities. Its tone throughout is kindly and indulgent—indeed, the proper tone to adopt in view of the novelty of the system under judgment. The Government is, on the whole, like ourselves, not disappointed with the result, although it does not fail to point out defects and probe the weak parts of the system.

The weakest point in the system is, as we have often pointed out, in regard to the administration of the taxes. Non-officials are at a disadvantage in enforcing taxation unknown to an official regime, and this is a difficulty which has operated in keeping down the municipal revenue almost everywhere. The average incidence of municipal taxation throughout Bengal (excluding Calcutta) in the past year, was only 11 annas and 11 pies per head of the population, and in no less than 67 municipalities it is so low as to amount to 8 annas or less per head. Although obviously there is scope for increase, any attempt in this direction on the part of the Municipal Commissioners is sure to raise a storm of opposition. In the Rampore Bauleah Municipality, the Commissioners had a hard time of it in carrying through a revision of the assessment. "A hue and cry was raised, in which those whose assessments had not been increased, nay, even those who had been exempted from assessment, joined. The municipal office was literally besieged with objection petitions.....A party of men, who affected to pose as friends of the poor, but who really had at heart some grudge against the municipality, actively set about rousing the people against it under this colourable pretext. For nearly two months there was scarcely any collection of house-tax. Everybody refused to pay." In a municipality in the Shahabad district, a Municipal Commissioner was threatened to be killed if the tax was increased. The Chairman of the Tikari Municipality was violently assaulted at his house by hired lattials, at the instance of the Vice-Chairman. The Government remarks on these incidents as follows :— "The year's record shows indeed that the path of duty is strewn with difficulties, which can only be overcome by honest perseverance, consistency, and firmness; but it may be expected that as experience is gained in the benefits derived from municipal improvement, the attitude of the rate-payers, as well as of the more retrograde and obstructive section of Municipal Commissioners, will become, as it has in other portions of the world, more tolerant of necessary taxation." In the meantime, the necessity of augmenting it is growing more and more urgent. "It is not too much to say," writes Mr. Cotton, "that in all municipal towns in Bengal there is a crying want of funds to meet expenditure which is gradually being forced upon the Commissioners, especially in the direction of improved sanitation." At the same time, the taxation as shown already is exceedingly low, and any attempt to raise it is attended with a general outbreak of hostility.

As in assessment, inefficient administration is the marked feature of the collections of the tax. The following remarks which we quote from the Resolution will show this :—

"The general result shows some improvement, but it is not so marked as might be expected, looking to the low rate of taxation which prevails, and the urgent need that exists everywhere for increased income to meet necessary expenditure. In regard to the Dacca Division, it is explained that the net decrease is to a large extent nominal, as the collections in 1888-89 included arrears of previous years, and were therefore considerably in excess of the normal realisations. In the case of the Chittagong Municipality, it is stated that a decrease of about Rs. 8,600 in the collections is due partly to the same cause as in the Dacca Division, and partly to the fact that for nearly three months the sircars had to attend on the auditor who was examining the accounts, and that in consequence the collections were smaller than ought to have been made. These excuses appear to the Lieutenant-Governor to be insufficient. It is satisfactory that the arrears have been liquidated, but they ought not to have been allowed to accrue. In any case it is to be regretted that the total gross collections show a falling off. It is a too common defect in Bengal municipalities that the executive is in arrear with its collections and it has been lately pointed out in a circular of Government that far greater promptitude must be insisted on in the collection or remission of taxes. Not more than one complete year of arrears should in any case be allowed. Municipalities which, like Ranchi and Kurseong, work in a business-like manner never have more than two quarters' arrears, and very often not more than one; and if municipalities in general avail themselves of the means provided in sections 120 to 129 of the Act, there is no reason why collections should ever be allowed to fall more than 12 months into arrear. As a matter of fact, in many municipalities the accounts are four or five years in arrear, and whenever this is the case it affords the clearest evidence of executive inefficiency."

The Resolution contains copious extracts from the Divisional reports. Mr. Toynbee's report of the Burdwan Division is pronounced to be the best. His remarks on the absence of a fixed scale of pay for municipal officers show his close and intimate knowledge of the subject, and we reproduce them for the benefit of Municipal Commissioners who should be guided by them.

"The examination of the budgets of the municipalities in this Division for the current year brought to light a marked tendency on the part of Municipal Commissioners to give occasional increases of salary to members of the establishments, instead of laying down a fixed scale (with periodical increase, if necessary) and adhering to it. This practice is one which should, in my opinion, be consistently and firmly discouraged, as being unfair to the tax-payers and demoralizing to the recipients. The funds of all the municipalities are very limited in comparison with their wants, and any increase allowed to establishments must necessarily decrease, pro tanto, the surplus available for works of general utility. In most cases the proposed increase was disallowed, and the Municipal Commissioners were asked to consider what their requirements were as regards the strength and pay of their establishments, to lay down a scale once for all, and to adhere to it for the future. The spectacle of a municipal subordinate canvassing the Commissioners to vote for an increase to his pay (not fixed by any scale) is not one that is consistent with a proper discharge of his duties."

The Commissioners of Divisions generally take more or less favourable view of the working of the Municipal Act. Mr. Toynbee says that, in spite of many faults of omission and commission, the municipalities in his Division have worked successfully. The absence of out-door supervision is however complained of. Mr. Smith testifies to the smooth working of Local Self-Government in the Presidency Division. The Commissioners of the Bhagalpore, Orissa and Chota Nagpore Divisions have recorded similar opinions. The Dacca Commissioner, being new to his Division, passes no general opinion. The Commissioner of Chittagong appears far from satisfied. He admits there has been much good individual work, but complains of laxness in the accounts, and the preponderant interest excited by personal matters over more important public matters. The Commissioner of the Patna Division metes out praise and blame to the municipalities in his Division according to their work, without offering a general view. Altogether, the work of the year under review is one on which the municipalities may be fairly congratulated, although in regard to the enforcement of proper municipal taxation, they failed to display either efficiency or aptitude.

CONNECTION OF PUBLIC SERVANTS WITH LAND-HOLDING AND COMMERCIAL SPECULATION IN INDIA.

No. 21---799, dated Simla, the 13th May 1885.

From---A. Mackenzie, Esq., Secretary to the Govt. of India, Home Department.

To---The Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Appointment Department.

In the course of correspondence with a Local Government, it has been brought to the notice of the Government of India that some misapprehension exists as to the precise scope and proper interpretation of the standing orders which regulate the connection of public servants with land-holding and commercial speculation in India. The Governor-General in Council accordingly considers it desirable, in continuation of Home Department Resolution No. 5---224-246, dated 20th February 1884, to frame, for facility of reference on the part of Local Governments and Administrations and Officers serving under them, a brief summary of the existing rules, and of the more important interpretations which have been placed upon certain of them by the Government of India with the approval of Her Majesty's Secretary of State.

4. Uncovenanted officers exercising independent judicial or revenue functions, whether of European, Eurasian, or Native descent, are not debarred from acquiring or possessing landed property in British India for agricultural purposes, provided that they must not hold landed property in the districts in which they are employed. Although uncovenanted officers are not precluded from holding land, it is inexpedient that appointments which necessarily confer a considerable amount of power and influence on their occupants, such as those of Munsif, Deputy Collector, and Tehsildar, should be filled by persons holding

With regard to investments other than those in land for the profits of cultivation, officers of every rank and class in the public service are expected to abstain from any investment (though of itself unobjectionable) which interests them privately in affairs or undertakings of the kind with which their public duty is connected. Subject to this general proviso, there is no objection to Government†† servants holding shares in mining or other companies (including agricultural companies) having for their object the development of the resources of the country, provided that they must not take part in the management of any such company, and that they must not be employed in the districts where the operations* of the company with which they may be connected are carried on. (Despatch from Secretary of State, No. 46, dated 31st May 1862.) This latter prohibition must be held to apply sometimes with less, sometimes with greater, force to certain officers connected with the central administration, such as Members of the Local Government, Members of the Board of Revenue and their Secretaries; and to indicate the necessity of great circumspection on the part of such officers as to the undertakings with which they become connected in any part of the province in which they are employed. (To Madras Government, No. 1086, dated 10th July 1884.)

 Paragraph 6 of despatch from the Government of India to Secretary of State, No. 40, dated 16th June 1873; despatch from Secretary of State, No. 99, dated 26th August 1873; and Home Department Resolution No. 13—467, dated 13th February 1874.

†† The Secretary of State has held (Despatch No. 73, dated 19th July 1883, paragraph 5), that the standing orders as to the connection of Government officers with trading companies apply only to gazetted officers of the Covenanted and Uncovenanted Services, and do not apply in the case of clerks and other ministerial officers in Government employ, with regard to whom the supervision of heads of departments should suffice as a check.

9. In the matter of taking part in the management of a company, it has been decided (Despatch from Secretary of State, No. 73, dated 19th July 1883, paragraph 4), that the prohibition was not intended to apply to the participation of Government officers in the direction of those companies only which are designed to develop the resources of the country, but also to preclude such officers from taking part in the direction of such institutions as banks. (Paragraph 4 of despatch from Secretary of State, No. 73, dated 19th July 1883.) It has also been held that the prohibition against officers taking part in the management of a company applies (From Secretary of State, No. 99, dated 7th September 1882) to public servants on leave equally with those in active service, but that it does not extend (Resolution of the Public Works Department, Nos. 1650-1672G, dated 14th December 1882) to officers who, with the consent of the Government of India, take service under Railway Companies working under concession from Government, nor does it apply to the management (Despatch from Secretary of State, No. 73, dated 19th July 1883) of associations which are established bonâ fide for the purpose of mutual supply and not of trade and trade profit (provided in this latter case that the interests of Government do not suffer by the double employment of the officer concerned. Although the prohibition against taking part in the "management" of a company cannot, taken literally, be held to debar an officer from taking part as a promoter or as one of the applicants for registration in the Memorandum of Association, the Governor-General in Council has held that the danger against which the prohibition was aimed, namely, that of official influence being abused or official trust betrayed, is under such circumstances not much less than if the officer took part in the management after the company has been started. Government servants are therefore distinctly forbidden to take any part in the promotion or registration of companies.

10. Speculation generally.—It is a standing order that servants of Government are required to abstain from speculative investments; but no literal definition has been laid down as to the stage at which, or circumstances under which, the holding of land or other valuable property becomes speculative. It is obviously speculative to secure a grant of land supposed to be auriferous with the object of disposing of it hereafter to companies. Habitual speculation by officials has been always held to be an evil; and the Government has reserved† to itself full power to deal stringently with the practice whenever it appears to prevail. The general distinction which exists between permanent and speculative investments is sufficiently described in the extract‡ from Home Department letter to the Government of Bengal, No. 1495, dated 10th April 1873.

11. The foregoing paragraphs contain a brief summary of the more important orders which have been issued from time to time on the subjects under notice, and the Governor-General in Council trusts that they will serve as a useful guide to Local Governments and Administrations and to officers serving under them. It should, however, be understood that this summary merely embraces the more important orders, and does not profess to be exhaustive.

* N. B.—The right of officers, civil and military, to hold shares in agricultural companies operating in Native States, is regulated by the same rules as apply to their holding shares in similar companies within British territory.

Despatch from Secretary of State, No. 22, dated the 25th November 1862, paragraph 5.

† Paragraph 7 of Despatch to Secretary of State, No. 40, dated 16th June 1873.

‡ Despatch from Secretary of State, No. 99, dated 26th August 1873.

§ The Government of India consider that there exists an essential difference between permanent and speculative investments; that the distinction is one of motive, and that the frequency of a man's purchases and sales may be, and usually is, very good evidence of his motive in effecting them. If an officer habitually buys and sells securities of a value notoriously fluctuating, it is clear that he is addicted to speculation, and he thereby undoubtedly lays himself open to the disapproval of Government, which can be expressed in various ways, and in a degree proportionate to the nature of the dereliction. If he engages in such pursuits to an extent which attracts public notice and unfavourable remark, so that his integrity or his application to his public duties is discussed and doubted, then he has given rise to a scandal with which the Government will have to deal.

INFANT-MARRIAGE.

Mr. Justice Muttusamy Iyer, of the Madras High Court, has delivered judgment in an appeal which had been engaging his attention, as also that of Mr. Justice Shephard, for some time, in which a most important question of infant-marriage was involved. The following are extracts from the judgment in the case of P. Vencata Charlu (plaintiff appellant) versus C. Tirumala Runga Charlu and another (1st and 2nd defendants), respondents.

The plaintiff sued in the Munsiff's Court of Bapatla for a decree appointing him guardian of his minor wife Vencatarungammah in lieu of her parents, the defendants, and giving him the custody of her and also restraining the defendants from re-marrying her to another person. The District Munsiff decreed that the plaintiff was not entitled to have the present custody of his legally married wife the minor; that until she attained puberty, she must remain under the charge and care of her parents, the defendants, and that defendants be restrained from re-marrying her to any other person. Against this decree the 1st defendant preferred an appeal to the Court of the District Judge of Kistna, at Masulipatam, which reversed the decree of the Munsiff, dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout, and declared that the marriage was invalid. This decision was appealed against in the High Court and resulted in the following judgment :—

This was a second appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Kistna, who dismissed the appellant's suit for an injunction to restrain respondents from marrying their daughter, Venkatarungammah, to any one else. The second respondent was the first respondent's wife and their daughter is a child aged 9 years. In June, 1884, the mother bestowed the girl in marriage on the appellant, and the marriage ceremony was duly solemnised in Narasimawamy's temple at Mangalagery. The father, however, was not present during the marriage nor had the mother his permission to marry their daughter to the appellant. There was an averment in his plaint that such permission was granted, but both the Lower Courts have found that it was not proved. There was also some evidence in the case to show that the father was present when the girl first proceeded to the appellant's house after the marriage, and what was commonly known as the Grabapravesam ceremony was performed. But the District Munsiff discredited the evidence and the Judge apparently concurred in his opinion. The respondents resided in the village of Sreerungapuram, and it appeared that the father went on a visit to his disciples about June 1884, when the mother took the child to Mangalagery, and there married her to the appellant as stated above. The District Munsiff considered that she acted as she did because she was probably not willing that the girl should be married to the father's mother's nominee, and that the appellant was a more suitable husband; and on this ground he was of opinion that the marriage was not fraudulent. But the Judge referred to the evidence that the mother represented falsely to the officiating Brahmin at Mangalagery that she had her husband's permission, and concluded from it that the marriage was a fraud on the father. Upon these facts the question arising for decision was whether the marriage was one which ought to be set aside under the Hindu law. Their lordships held that there could be no doubt that a Hindu marriage was a religious ceremony; according to all texts it was a Samskaram or Sacrament, the only one prescribed for a woman and one of the principal religious rites prescribed for purification of the soul. It was binding for life because the marriage rite completed by Setapady or the walking of seven steps before the consecrated fire created a religious tie, and a religious tie when once created could not be untied. It was not a mere contract in which a consenting mind was indispensable. The person married might be a minor or even of unsound mind, and yet if the marriage rite was duly solemnised, there was a valid marriage. . . As a religious ceremony it became complete when the Setapady was performed and there were several Smritis to that effect. Manu said :—“The relation of husband and wife was created by the texts pronounced when the girl was taken by the hand. Be it known that those texts end, according to the learned, with the texts prescribed for walking seven steps.” Vasishta said :—“In connection with the formation of relation of husband and wife, agreement is first prescribed; then taking by the hand is prescribed. It was said that mere agreement was defective and that of the two taking by the hand was indispensable.” Yama said :—“Not by the pouring of water nor by the work of gift is the relation of husband and wife formed, but it is formed by the rite of taking the bride by the hand and when they walk together the seventh step.” Their lordships observed that the marriage ritual prescribed for Brahmins, and now in general use amongst them, was what was known as the Brahma marriage, and this was the form customarily adopted even where the father accepted the price for the girl, and the marriage was in substance of the Asura kind. The ritual, so far as it extended to Setapady might be divided into three parts: the Vakdanam or the promise to give; the actual gift of the bride, or Kanyakadanam; and the marriage rite which commenced with taking the bride by the hand (Panigrahanam), and ended with the seventh step taken around the consecrated fire. For their Lordship's present purpose the Vakdanam and the Kanyakadanam might be treated as forming one essential part and the marriage rite was the other. It must be remembered that the ritual was prescribed for a minor or a child. For according to Hindu law and custom a Brahmin girl must be married before she attained maturity and therefore at a time when she was not in a position to choose a suitable husband for herself. Two principles, therefore, formed together the groundwork of the marriage ceremony. A natural or legal guardian, acting in the interests of the girl with due regard to her welfare to choose a suitable husband for her, and the choice consecrated by the marriage rite and thereby unalterably fixed. Hence two propositions of law might be taken to be established beyond controversy, viz., where there was a gift by a legal guardian and the marriage rite was duly solemnised, the marriage was irrevocable, and where the girl was abducted by fraud or force and married and there was no gift either by a natural or legal guardian, there was a fraud upon the policy of the religious ceremony, and there was, therefore, no valid religious ceremony. . . The third proposition of law which was material to the case before their lordships was that when the mother of the girl acting as her natural guardian in view of her welfare and without fraud or force gave away the girl in marriage and the marriage rite was duly solemnised, the marriage was not to be set aside. This view was supported by authority and was sound in principle. . . Moreover several Smriti writers prescribed the gift of the daughter in marriage before maturity as the father's duty and not as his right. So Brahaspati enjoined the father to give the daughter in marriage before she menstruated and declared that if he failed to do so he was guilty of causing abortion. Narada and Yajuyavalkya pronounced him guilty of child murder. Samvarta declared that a disgusting punishment was prescribed for the next world for this dereliction of duty on the part of the father. As regarded the doctrine that a marriage rite once duly solemnised was not to be set aside, Narada said :—“Once is a partition ordained, once is a girl given in marriage, and once does a man say ‘I give.’” The author of the Smriti Chandrika forbade a second Samskaram, or marriage, for the Kali yug. The theory was when a legal relation was once consecrated and confirmed by mantra or Vedic text, it was permanently fixed. Hence it was when a boy was invested with a sacrificial thread and consecrated by Vedic texts as belonging to his father's Gotram he was not eligible for adoption into a different Gotram. There was also another reason why when this marriage rite was once duly solemnised the marriage should not be set aside except on clear proof of fraud. The religious theory was that when an adoption or a marriage which was forbidden was consecrated by Vedic text and the sacrament was thereby defiled, a servile state supervened and not that the prior status remained untainted. As regarded adoption, the author of the Dattak Meemansa said in Section IV Sloka 40 :—“Should one be adopted on whom the ceremony of tonsure and other rites had been performed, a servile state ensued not that of a son. See also Sloka 46. It had, however, been held by this Court that when an adoption could not be upheld owing to a legal defect, the adopted boy did not forfeit his status as son in his natural family, and in the same way it might be held that when a marriage rite was set aside on the ground that it was forbidden by the very law which prescribed the rite, the girl's prior legal status remained without taint, the rite being defiled and being inefficacious on that ground. The religious theory mentioned above and the social difficulty which might arise from the marriage rite being set aside was a legitimate ground for recognising the doctrine of factum valet, except in the cases of clear fraud or force when the religious ceremony might be pronounced to be defiled by fraud upon its policy. Applying the foregoing principles to the case before their lordships, they thought the Judge was in error in setting aside the marriage on the ground that the mother falsely stated to the officiating Brahmin that she had the father's permission and thereby committed a fraud upon him. The Judge acted probably on the policy of Lord Hardwicke's Act in England, which was passed in a great measure to prevent the marriage of minors without the consent of their parents or guardians and which declared that the marriage of persons, wilfully intermarried without the license from a person having authority to grant the same (the grant of which was forbidden to minors, without the consent of parents and guardians) was null and void, the officiating Brahmin under Hindu law was hired for the occasion and was not a person clothed with a statutory authority to be exercised subject to the guardian's consent, and there was no analogy between the English statute and the Hindu law. Moreover, it had already been shown that the giving of a daughter in marriage was more a duty than a right, and in the case before their lordships the District Munsiff had found that the mother acted bona fide in the interests of her daughter and as her natural guardian, desiring to provide her with a suitable husband. Their lordships, therefore, reversed the decree of the District Judge and restored that of the District Munsiff, directing respondents to pay the appellant's costs in the High Court and in the Lower Appellate Court.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

CHARLES KINGSLEY'S LAST POEM.

From the newest Edition of his Works.

"ARE you ready for your steeplechase, Lorraine, Lorraine, Lorree?

Barum, Barum, Barum, Barum, Barum, Barum, Barea,
You're booked to ride your capping race to-day at Coulterlee,
You're booked to ride Vindictive for all the world to see,
To keep him straight, and keep him first, and win the race for me.

She clasped her new born baby, poor Lorraine, Lorraine, Lorree,
"I cannot ride Vindictive as any man might see,
And I will not ride Vindictive, with this baby on my knee;
He's killed a boy, he's killed a man, and why must he kill me?"

"Unless you ride Vindictive, Lorraine, Lorraine, Lorree,
Unless you ride Vindictive to-day at Coulterlee,
And land him safe across the brook, and win the blank for me,
It's you may keep your baby, for you'll get no keep from me."

"That husbands could be cruel," said Lorraine, Lorraine, Lorree,
"That husbands could be cruel I have known for seasons three;
But, oh! to ride Vindictive while a baby cries for me,
And be killed across a fence at last for all the world to see!"

She mastered young Vindictive—oh! the gallant lass was she;
And kept him straight and won the race as near as near could be;
But he killed her at the brook against a pollard willow tree,
Oh! he killed her at the brook, the brute, for all the world to see,
And no one but the baby cried for poor Lorraine, Lorree.

A GLOVE.

AH, yesterday I found a glove
Grown shabby, full of tiny rips,
But dear to me because my love
Once through it thrust her finger tips.

A glove one would not care to see
Upon his arm along the street;
Yet here I own there is for me
No relic in the world more sweet.

A faint, far scent of lavender
Steals from it, as the clover smelt
When through the fields I walked with her,
And plucked the blossoms for her belt.

Faith! but I loved the little hand
That used to wear this time-stained thing,
Its slightest gesture of command
Would set my glad heart fluttering.

Or if it touched my finger, so,
Or smoothed my hair—why should I speak

Of those old days? It makes, you know,
The tears brim over on my cheek.

Poor, stained, worn-out, long-wristed glove,
I think it almost understands
That reverently and with love
I hold it in my trembling hands.

And that it is so dear to me,
With its old fragrance, far and faint,
Because my mother wore it, she—
On earth my love, in heaven my saint.

JAMES BERRY BENSEL.

THINGS THAT NEVER DIE.

THE pure, the bright, the beautiful,
That stirred our hearts in youth,
The impulse of a wordless prayer,
The dream of love and truth;
The longing after something lost,
The spirit's yearning cry,
The striving after better hopes—
These things shall never die.

The timid hand stretched forth to aid
A brother in his need,
The kindly word in grief's dark hour,
That proves a friend indeed;
The plea for mercy, softly breathed,
When justice threatens nigh;
The sorrowings of a contrite heart—
These things shall never die.

Let nothing pass, for every hand
Must find some work to do;
Lose not a chance to waken love,
Be firm and just and true;
So shall a light that cannot fade
Beam on thee from on high,
And angel voices say to thee,
"These things can never die."

Holloway's Pills.—The Great Need.—The blood is the life, and on its purity our health as well as our existence depends. These Pills thoroughly cleanse the vital fluid from all contaminations, and by that means strengthen and invigorate the whole system, healthily stimulate sluggish organs, repress over-excited action, and establish the circulation and secretions throughout every part of the body. The balsamic nature of Holloway's Pills exercises marvellous power in giving tone to debilitated and nervous constitutions. These Pills remove all obstructions, both in the bowels and elsewhere, and are, on that account, much sought after for promoting regularity of action in young females and delicate persons who are naturally weak, or have from some cause become so.

Subscribers in the country are requested to remit by postal money orders, if possible, as the safest and most convenient medium, particularly as it ensures acknowledgment through the Department. No other receipt will be given any other being unnecessary, and likely to cause confusion.

NEWS AND OUR COMMENTS.

ALL is up with Lord Connemara. He made over charge of the Governorship of Madras, on Monday afternoon, to the Hon'ble Mr. J. H. Garstin, officiating Senior Member of Council. He will, however, be allowed all marks of respect due to his resigned position till he departs. He does not go to England direct, but starts for Japan on Sunday. He was offered a parting dinner by the officiating Governor which his Lordship thankfully declined. There is a movement for a permanent memorial. An oil portrait of Lord Connemara is for sale, and a public subscription has been started to purchase it.

THE next pucca Governor of Madras is Lord Wenlock. He is expected at Bombay on the 19th January. We hope Lord Wenlock will prove a better respecter of the ties of wedlock.

THE death of two retired prominent Anglo-Indians is announced this week. Sir Rivers Thompson, the late Lieutenant-Governor of these Provinces, and Sir Barnes Peacock, late Chief Justice of our High Court, are no more. Out of respect to the memory of the late Governor, the Bengal Secretariat was closed on Monday. The Chamber of Commerce has started a movement for a permanent memorial. It must be more than a portrait, for there is one already in the Town Hall.

SIR Tanjore Madhav Rao is retiring from active public life. The other day he resigned the membership of the political Congress Committee. He has now withdrawn his connection with the social Congress. These bodies have evidently outgrown the Raja's notions of agitation and progress. Notwithstanding all, we may be excused for doubting the earnestness of the resolve. Our people have a strange puerility. They are not ashamed of sham moves to enhance their prices. We have a magnate nearer home who has retired fifty times if he has retired once, during the last quarter of a century.

THE offer of Rani Manmohini Debi of Putiya, in the Rajshahye District, to construct a number of wells, at an estimated expenditure of Rs. 10,000 to Rs. 12,000 per annum for four or five years, has deservedly found a place in the Calcutta Gazette of this week. This is the orthodox way of doing charity and good, and it is much appreciated in the district.

MR. William Hayes, Barrister-at-law, Bangalore, prosecuted Mr. O'Shaughnessy, municipal Executive Engineer, with obstructing him, by catching hold of his horse, in his drive along the Brigade Road under repairs. The Engineer was fined Rs. 5, by the Sessions Judge Colonel W. Hill. It seems the municipality is not competent to absolutely close a thoroughfare against the public, although it is liable in the absence of proper precautions against accident along a road under repairs.

THE next Criminal Sessions will commence on Monday, the 8th December, under the presidency of Mr. Justice Pigot. The Calendar includes the Jain Defamation case, which has obtained a name from the number of counsel engaged on both sides.

THE Budget of the Rampore State, as prepared by the Council, shews a surplus of Rs. 7,13,000 on an income of Rs. 26,00,000.

THE Lieutenant-Governor has appointed the Special Census Officer for Calcutta to be the officer who may, in the town of Calcutta, require

"(a) every military or naval officer in command of any body of men belonging to Her Majesty's military or naval forces, or of any vessel of war,

(b) every person (except a pilot or harbour-master) having charge or control of a vessel,

(c) every person in charge of a lunatic asylum, hospital, work-house, prison, reformatory, or lock-up, or of any public, charitable, religious, or educational institution,

(d) every keeper, secretary, or manager of any serai, hotel, boarding-house, lodging-house, or club, and

(e) every occupant of immoveable property having, at the time of the taking of the census, not less than fifty persons employed under him, or living on or in such property, to perform such of the duties of a census officer in relation to the persons who, at the time of the taking of the census, are under his command or charge, or inmates of his house, or present on or in such property, as the said Special Census Officer may, by written order, direct.

THE Reserved Forests of the Darjeeling, Terai and Lower Hills (Kurseon and Teesta Sub-divisions of the Darjeeling Forest Division,) as well as those of the district of Julpigori (Julpigori and Buxa Sub-divisions of the Julpigori Forest Sub-division) are closed against hunting, shooting and fishing, from the 15th December, 1890, to the 1st June, 1891, except with the written permission of the Conservator of Forests or the Local Government.

IN supersession of all the old, new rules have been issued by the Local Government for the preservation of copies of books printed in British India, and for the registration of such books. The change was necessary on account of the amending law Act X of 1890 passed in the last session of the Supreme Council.

The Inspector-General of Registration in Calcutta and the Sub-Registrars of Assurances in the mofussil have been appointed officers to receive books, &c., printed and published. They are further authorized to institute prosecutions against the printer for non-delivery or delivery after due date, and against the publisher when he refuses to supply the printer with maps, prints, or other engravings belonging to a book. The proprietor of the copyright or of any portion of the copyright of a book must pay the fee of Rs. 2. The tender must be made by an application in writing praying for registration under Act XX of 1847. The receiving officers are to transmit the books with the certificate of printer, as to the delivery of the book out of the press, to the Bengal Library. They shall remain there for the Bengal Provinces for three years, when they will be made over to the Calcutta Public Library, Metcalfe Hall, to be kept in the portion of the Library devoted to the public, and not issued to subscribers.

THE following Circular Order of the High Court is significant of the pressure of work on the Subordinate Civil Courts, occasioned by the shortness of hands and promotion by results—of returns:—

"The High Court has much reason to believe that the Civil Courts not infrequently 'strike of' cases relating to the execution of decrees more for the sake of causing the disappearance of a particular case from periodical returns of pending cases than as a proper order putting an end to an application for execution. It has also been found that such cases are not infrequently restored to the files without any special reason, except as an acknowledgment that the former order was merely formal. Such a practice cannot but be regarded as an attempt to misrepresent the state of business before a Court, and will subject any officer to punishment. The Judges are aware that, from pressure of business in the trial of original suits, Subordinate Judicial Officers are in great difficulty in keeping their execution files under proper control, but the High Court must insist upon greater regularity in dealing with cases of execution for which one day in every week should be specially reserved.

Proceedings connected with the execution of a decree should be dealt with under the same procedure as original suits, and cannot be put an end to or revived save under the procedure expressly laid down by law."

We hope the Judges will direct their attention to the expensive and sometimes ruinous procedure in the Original Side of the High Court. Mr. Justice Norris once tried to keep down the cost, but such fitful attempts cannot avail against a huge ancient practice, developed into almost a vested right.

THE forecast made in regard to the annual income of the Howrah Bridge likely to be attained after the abolition of the local tolls and the terminal charges on rice, grain, pulses, seeds and salt, has been fulfilled. The Committee's estimate fixed the probable receipts at Rs. 1,57,597 and the actual receipts in last year have not fallen short of the estimate. On the contrary, there was a moderate excess of about 11 thousand rupees.

From the Bridge report it further appears that there was rather a large increase in the number of collisions of vessels with the bridge in the last year, which is attributed to the exceptionally strong freshets and eddies of the year.

ON the morning of the 22nd November last, Shama Bewa, a female servant, aged between 35 and 40, was found murdered in her room in her master's house at 40, Hartoki Bagan Lane, with her stomach ripped open. There was no clue to the murder. The Police has since traced it to a compositor in the Bengal Secretariat Press, Shib Chunder Mitter by name. There is no direct evidence against him. Whatever evidence there is, is all circumstantial. He is being tried at the Magistracy.

WOMEN are proving formidable competitors to men in all walks of life. They have a Lady Guide Association in London, and their experience of the first twelvemonth is highly encouraging. 290 parties availed themselves of the services of lady Guides for sight-seeing alone. We wonder what sort of guides, philosophers and friends are these. If they are worth anything, their Association will, en passant, advance the neglected cause of matrimony in England.

NOTES, LEADERETTES, AND OUR OWN NEWS.

CHOLERA has made its appearance in the city—at a time when it is least expected. The first cases did not prove fatal, but deaths are now reported. All seasons now seem favorable for this dreaded disease. Unless we have more chilly North wind, the prospect is disheartening, and may scare away visitors.

THREE of the Caboolie fighters of last week were taken to hospital. One of them—Abdul Karim, a Suleiman—died there. The verdict of the Coroner's Jury is that the "deceased died from the effects of injuries received in a general riot between two parties of Caboolis known as the Suleiman and Kharooti Khyel, but there is no evidence by which the person or persons who struck the blow or blows can be identified."

17 Kharootis and 13 Suleimans are being tried in the Police Court. The two clans will be tried separately, for the convenience of evidence by one set against the other. The death at the hospital of a Suleiman aggravates the offence against the Kharootis, for the Crown Prosecutor charges all the 17 Kharootis with the death of Abdul Karim. Syed Ameer Hossein Khan Bahadoor will indeed do a service if by his decision he can end the old feud between the two clans.

MILKMEN have now and again been hauled up for adulterating milk before sale. They always escaped punishment, though. It was contended with success that the mere addition of water did not make the milk noxious and therefore punishable. Recently, that contention has received high judicial sanction. Mr. Justice Handley, of the Madras High Court, has decided that "the mere addition of water to milk cannot be adulteration so as to make milk a noxious drink within the meaning of Rule 31, Chapter 3, Cantonment Rules, made under Act I. of 1866. It is not alleged or proved that the water added was noxious or the mixture noxious. Considering the danger to public health which may arise from the mixture of impure water it would be very desirable that a rule be passed making the addition of water to milk by a milk vendor punishable."

So much for Judge Handley of Fort St. George. But there are Handleys and Handleys, and there are Magistrates as well as Judges. Fort William too boasts—and has now reason to boast of—its Handley. He is only a Magistrate, to be sure, but then as regards the particular article in dispute—milk and water—there is little to choose between "My Lord" and "Your Worship."

Our Mr. Handley—the officiating Chief Presidency Magistrate—has, it must be confessed, risen to the height of the great argument. He has found a way out of the difficulty. He has solved the problem of punishing the plausible rogues, and within the terms of the law. He has convicted a milkman, under the usual circumstances, of cheating under the Indian Penal Code, and fined him Rs. 10. That is a public relief—unless some greater Handley spoils the business.

OWING to the unfortunate paucity of native capacity, the Congress-makers have been constrained to invoke European aid. The first three sittings exhausted all the indigenous notabilities eligible for the presidency. Since then the office has gone a-begging, without a single name of position and calibre being suggested from any part of India. Accordingly, the management went out of the native inhabitants of the Empire to seek the annual chief. And so the Fourth Indian Congress was presided over by a British merchant. The next year the same difficulty continuing, they again imported a "Britisher" for the last or Fifth Congress. Nor is there any sign of the abatement of the dearth. They have fished in all waters, from the Sea of the Coromandel to the sandbanks and shoals of the Indus, without catching a true "native" to speak of—a passable pearl oyster. Type of every Indian undertaking, it is the manifest destiny of the Presidency to be a preserve for the foreigner. There is just a silver lining to the prospect. The Chair at length shows a sneaking leaning to colour. There is just a hope for a native occupation of the seat of honour. From European to Eurasian is a homeward step. Till such time as we can get Indian khas, let us console ourselves with constructive Indian. Failing in other quarters, the Congress Committee have secured Mr. Gantz, the President of the Eurasian Association, Madras, for the Congress Chair of this year. But who receives the delegates?

THE threatened doom of Indian industries promises happily to be averted. The Indian Factory Commission having completed their enquiry, have submitted their report. They practically leave the present system of mill labour intact, and thus the sinister object of English manufacturers in pressing for the enquiry and for legislation has been rightly frustrated. The principal points for the decision of the Commission were the proposed limitations of hours of work for women and children. In both these points the Commission would make no change where the shift-system of working prevails, while outside the shift-system also they recommend in the case of women the retention of the present system, leaving Local Governments authority to treat individual operatives on slightly different terms should they desire it. Mr. Sorabjee S. Bengalee dissents from this view and recommends the shift-system to be introduced in Ahmedabad. For children outside the shift-system, half-time working is recommended as the best solution. The recommendations of the Commission are conceived in the interests alike of the operatives and their employers, and reconcile both excellently. The great danger which was apprehended from the Commission lest they should suggest changes which would injuriously affect the wages now earned by women and children, has been avoided, and we congratulate them on their judicious finding. The concluding remarks made by the Commission will be endorsed by every true lover of the operative. They say :—

"In conclusion, we hope we may be allowed to say that we have been profoundly impressed with the vast and far-reaching benefits which the people of India are deriving from the development and prosperity of the great industries which we have seen on our tour through the country. It would, in our judgment, be a great calamity if by any injudicious recommendations or unnecessary restrictions the prosperity of those industries was endangered."

We hear reports about the way the ensuing Census is being arranged for by the district authorities, which are far from reassuring. We therefore give a warning before it is too late not to appoint men as Superintendents of Charges or even as Supervisors of Circles merely on account of their social position. Respectability is indeed essential, but intellectual qualification a sine qua non, and it will be a great mistake to entrust a work of the kind to men not possessing a fair share of both. Considering the importance of the Census inquiry, it would be a mistake to accept Municipal Chairmen as such, eligible for the task. Instead of that, discrimination should be exercised in finding out those who fulfil the two conditions referred to. What a pity that Chairmen should have been appointed Census Superintendents who have actually to spell their way through an ordinary letter in English! It is not a little amusing that, while a Deputy Magistrate at headquarters in charge of the District Census is energetically dashing off half a dozen of letters and circulars each day containing instructions, &c., to each Superintendent of a Census Charge, this poor soul is awfully bewildered by the missives pouring upon him and does not know what to do with them. The public and the press should be wide awake that no such bungling is allowed to mar a work of such great importance.

COMPLAINTS reach us from various quarters of the careless way in which the lists of voters for the approaching municipal elections have been prepared. A uniformity of practice appears to be wholly wanting, the rule being interpreted one way in one place and in a different way in another. How there could be diversity in such a simple matter, is indeed highly strange. But as the fact is even so, we think the Government might step in and lay down an authoritative interpretation for general guidance, once for all. The rule which has proved such a puzzle to municipal luminaries seems to be plain enough. It is this: "All persons who have during the year immediately preceding the election paid an aggregate amount of not less than Re. 1-8 in respect of any rates imposed by the Act, and who have been duly registered as hereinafter provided, shall be qualified to vote." The year immediately preceding the election is variously understood, and an aggregate amount of Re. 1-8 in respect of any rates has been gratuitously made to mean rates for the year immediately preceding the election to the exclusion of rates paid for previous periods. The effect of this perverse interpretation has in some municipalities been to remove hundreds of voters from the list by one stroke of the pen, and there is naturally an outcry. In some towns, the municipal executive with whom is left the work of preparing the registers are even suspected of foul practices in the manipulation of the registers, with a view to unduly affect the results of the elections. Men belonging to an adverse party are summarily got rid of by the exclusion of their names from the voters' lists, and the publication of these excites so little general interest that the omissions often remain undetected till it is too late. We are not disposed to attach implicit reliance on such imputations, but there is no denying the misinterpretation which practically disfranchises a large number of men. In the interest of the numerous class who have been unjustly disqualified in this way, we ask if it be yet too late to mend. The Government is liberal enough by lowering the limit of payment of rates to concede the privilege of voting to the humblest classes, but its generosity is frustrated by the wilful or careless interference of subordinates. This is really nothing short of a scandal which should be wiped away. So far from any signs in this direction, the very Municipal authorities who make such a mess in such a comparatively simple business are going to be confidently entrusted with Census work without reference to their capacity or intelligence.

ON Tuesday afternoon, at St. Paul's Cathedral, Miss Alicia Sydney Bayley, second daughter of Sir Stuart Bayley, was joined in holy wedlock to Mr. William Buckley Gladstone, son of the late Mr. Murray

Gladstone, a cousin of the G. O. M. The gathering at the church was large and respectable. The Hindoo community was represented by the Maharaja and Maharani of Cooch Behar, the Mahomedan by Mrs. Ameer Ali and the Hebrew by Mr. and Mrs. D. E. J. Ezra and Mr. and Mrs. Gubboy. There is another native name among the presenters of the wedding gifts which number about two hundred. It is Mr. and Mrs. Surbadicary in the Statesman and Mr. and Mrs. Subyorde Cary in the Englishman and the Indian Daily News. If native, as the Statesman puts it, the holders must be very progressive Hindus indeed, for their present is a cruel stand. The bridesmaids were the Misses M. Bayley, Halliday, Worgan, Hilton, White and Lambert, and the best man was Mr. Arthur Gladstone. The Revd. Welbore McCarthy conducted the marriage service. We hope this Hibernian priest bore himself better than he is wont to do when rushing into print. He was apparently not allowed full swing. He had little opportunity for proving an ill bore. For, the service over, this ecclesiastic was shelved. At the conclusion, the Revd. A. G. Luckman delivered an address. He, at any rate, was no bore, well or ill, if he could not command the wisdom proverbially attributed to his ancient namesake. For, his speech was short and, in consequence, sweet. From the church, the party retired to Belvedere, where they partook of cake and wine. The same evening, the married couple went up to Barrackpore Park, whence they were to proceed to Darjeeling to seal the marriage bond with the earnest felicities of the honeymoon.

THE Indian Mirror need not be alarmed. Mr. Lee, the Chairman, and not the Municipal Commissioners, entertains the Hon'ble Sir Charles Alfred Elliott to a Water Party, on Monday, the 8th December. The Chairman, to be sure, but not as Chairman. In other words, Janāb Lee Saheb Bahadoor or, if you will, Citizen Lee is not only a host—himself, but the host by himself—for the nonce. If our announcement of the entertainment fired up our contemporary in the mistaken interest of Municipal finance, we are sorry for it, as we find Mr. Lee gives the Party independent of the Corporation. For all that, he invites the Commissioners among his other friends, "to meet the Hon'ble Sir Charles Alfred Elliott, K. C. S. I." The city ought to be grateful to Mr. Lee for the opportunity afforded its representative citizens of acquaintance with the incoming ruler.

OUR little insular sister is very unfortunate. We have the best disposition towards Ceylon—our only sister, after all, to speak of—but what can we do? In this age of iron and competition without mercy, brought up in the teachings of European philosophy and under the example of British life, there is no credit for anything but cash. It is impossible thoroughly to be fond of an intimate blood connection who does not overflow with coin. A state may get on without an aristocracy or a church establishment, but plutocracy is a condition sine qua non of a well-ordered society. Half measures are mean compromises, unwelcome to a generous soul, and Ceylon has never had any millionaire. Perhaps a small Asiatic island, smaller than Ireland, scarcely deserves such a possession: Half-wallahs are deemed sufficient. And now misfortune upon misfortune, the island has lost its half-millionaire. And to make matters worse for the status of the poor island in the ton of capital, its moiety of a million is in the way of being whittled and dispersed, the poor man having left heirs—to any number. He has left a will, it is true, but unfortunately that is a stupid Oriental piece of business which essays to divide the estate and effects with justice. No one is cut with a shilling.

Mr. Charles de Soysa, a native of Ceylon and its wealthiest citizen, died the other day and now his loyal relict has proved his distinction as a millionaire by half and as a philanthropist by—less. The proof was given in the District Court of Colombo. The lands and effects of all kinds of the deceased were sworn to be under forty lacs of Rupees. The probate stamp will amount to Rs. 30,000. The will is dated the 29th September 1890. The heirs are fourteen in number, namely:—Fanny Georgiana Catherine Fernando, Jerome William Charles de Soysa, Margaret Frances Mary de Soysa, Jane Maria Caroline de Soysa, Alfred Joseph Richard de Soysa, Anne Lydia Charlotte de Soysa, Edwin Lionel Frederick de Soysa, Thomas Henry Arthur de Soysa, Crawford Macdonald Margarita de Soysa, Josslyn Emily Julia de Soysa, Selina Louisa Elizabeth de Soysa, James Samuel Walter de Soysa, Lambert Wilfred Alexander de Soysa, and Regiland Earnest Stephen de Soysa.

The control and management of the Prince and Princess of Wales' College at Moratuwa is vested in the eldest surviving son, the executors paying annually Rs. 3,000 for its maintenance. Each daughter on her marriage will receive property of the value of Rupees two lacs, each son on coming of age is to get Rs. 3,000 per annum. After the death of their mother, the property will be equally divided among the sons, with the exception of the entailed estate consisting of some properties of old Mr. Susay de Soysa, the uncle, and of Mr. Jusey de Silva, the father-in-law, of the testator.

THE interest of this week's mail news centres in Mr. Parnell and his desertion by his party. He refuses to give up his leadership at the dictation of his late colleagues, as he believes Ireland and America are with him. The Gladstonian Liberals are indignant at his disclosure of party confidences and put a different construction upon his version of the story. There is a serious breach and communication is stopped with Parnell, and his retirement vehemently insisted upon.

WHILE at Agra, the Viceroy performed several interesting ceremonies. The Maternity Hospital built in connection with the Lady Dufferin Fund was opened for Lady Lansdowne and the Viceroy spoke on the occasion in cordial sympathy with the objects of that Fund. Lord Lansdowne fully appreciated the difficulties which had to be overcome to make the important experiment a success but he expressed confidence as to the result. Not the least of these difficulties was the Indian aversion of the medical profession as a degrading one, but there were signs of the steady disappearance of that prejudice. His Lordship held forth on the congeniality of the profession to women and encouraged them with the bright prospect of usefulness which lay before those who were receiving the training now offered under the auspices of Lady Dufferin's scheme. In conclusion, the Viceroy acknowledged the liberality with which native gentlemen had supported the scheme and expressed a hope that it would remain undiminished during Lady Lansdowne's incumbency as Patroness of the Fund. His Lordship then opened the Agra Water Works and spoke eloquently of the advantages of the measure to the health and the general welfare of the citizens. His Lordship's visit to the Agra College furnished him with another opportunity of marking his great interest in the cause of education. The Viceroy availed himself of the occasion to dwell upon the importance of technical education and expressed his approval of the efforts now being made to improve the discipline and tone of conduct of the students.

At Benares, in replying to an address from the Municipality, his Lordship made a capital speech. The age of the city and its sanctity invested Benares with peculiar importance in his Lordship's eyes. A significant reference of no small importance at this day was made to the policy of Government in regard to the religious faith of the people.

Lord Lansdowne said "The Government of India has, as you remind me, been careful to preserve a strict neutrality in all matters connected with the religious faith of the people of India. I am making no departure from that neutrality when I assure you of my sympathy with your endeavours to cling to and preserve amidst the rapid changes, moral and material, through which India is passing, all that is noblest and best in the Hindu character and in Hindu traditions." The Viceroy commended the efforts which were making for the sanitary improvement of the city to the support of Hindus in other parts of India, and gladly accepted the patronage of the Kasi Gunga Prasad Sabha. His Lordship then laid the foundation stone of a Hospital for women to be named after the late Maharajah Iswari Prasad.

REIS & RAYYET.

Saturday, December 6, 1890.

THE RETIRING LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR OF BENGAL.

A FEW short days more and the Palace at Alipore will know not its present Lord. Another King is in readiness to rule over Israel. On the 17th of this month Sir Steuart Bayley descends from the Provincial Throne. He will lay down the reins of Government before his time, and quickly disappear in the mist of the Ocean by which he originally came, never more to see this land. He has been so thoroughly good and just a Ruler that the country is really unwilling to part with him so soon. Sir Steuart has passed the best portion of his life in the Province over which he at length came to preside, and the parting—whatever its cause or whatever its compensations—cannot but be painful to both sides. There are blessed changes, but this one is not of them. We sincerely regret these early retirements just as your ruler's accumulated knowledge and ripened experience and the confidence at last inspired among the various sections of the people, promised to be of the greatest service in the solution of the grave problems of administration which are always presenting themselves.

We were confident of Sir Steuart's success from the first. On his appointment we assured our countrymen of an era of just and sympathetic rule. And we are peculiarly gratified at the fulfilment of our forecast. Sir Steuart first impressed us favorably during the short spell of his acting Lieutenant-Governorship of Bengal. At that time Sir Ashley Eden's popularity was at its height. That Lieutenant-Governor had brought to office the highest reputation and he was deputed to special work before he had been thoroughly tried at the head of the Bengal administration. To take his place in Bengal, for a short time without the advantage and prestige of permanency, was no light responsibility, and would have tried the loftiest ability and the most supple tact. Sir Steuart Bayley passed through the perilous ordeal, not simply unscathed, but with enhanced credit. His utterances and proceedings of that period were characterised by such firmness and wisdom and above all such quiet sympathy as at once to mark him out for the full-time future Ruler of the people. Our prediction has come true, for what man whose opinion is worth anything will deny that Sir Steuart has done full justice to the grave trust that was laid upon him? Even cavillers and fastidious critics must allow that he has been always determined to deal by all interests with equal justice and a single-minded zeal for the public good.

Sir Steuart's demeanour was no small point in his favor. His sober dignity was truly worthy of a Ruler of an Oriental people and yet it was just the thing for a responsible constitutional Governor of a country broken into rival communities and innumerable races, tribes, and factions. Thoroughly accessible to all, by every door, attentive to every representation, polite with a stately courtesy unknown among British men, and hitherto supposed to be foreign to his own shy and almost self-brooding disposition, he has maintained a lofty impartiality between opposing personalities and interests. So far as weak human nature might be expected to do, he has done justice to all parties, favour to none. And this without the betrayal of any vulgar self-consciousness. There was no hankering after popularity—no playing to the gallery. He held his way firmly and withal meekly, inspiring by his strength a healthy awe of his supremacy, while winning the gentler affections by his meekness and gentleness. For the sake of a false popularity, one is often tempted to play class against class, sect against sect, and build his name upon the wreck of the country's true welfare and peace. This is a besetting weakness in Rulers, but nothing of the kind with Sir Steuart Bayley, or his right-hand man, Sir John Edgar. Nevertheless, both are justly popular. But the popularity they have won is of a more solid and lasting than flashy kind, and it will grow as time goes on and appreciation of sterling merits advances in the community.

Above all, will the retiring Satrap be remembered for his genuine sympathies for the people whose destinies were in his hands—for Europeans as for Natives, for Hindus as much as for Mahomedans. Coming of a stock associated with the romantic traditions of the Old Civil Service, he realised in himself the good points of the Civilian of both the old and the new era. Like Sir Ashley Eden, he had his best feelings for the old decaying or struggling Nobility of the land. The Mahomedans received every proper encouragement from his active sympathy. The Subordinate Judicial as well as Executive Service always felt his friendship. The improvement of the position and prospects of the more deserving officers has been among his dearest objects. Local Self-Government received at his hands no small expansion, and at the present moment his recommendation for the creation of Village-Committees as the unit and base of the system is under the consideration of the Government of India. Municipalities which had not the privilege of electing their Chairmen have now got what they so much prize, and we believe he was favorably disposed to concede the same power to selected District Boards which had earned the confidence of Government by their past success. The system of Honorary Magistrates' Benches has also been placed upon a more satisfactory footing. Sir Steuart's activity has been displayed in so many directions that to enumerate all his successful measures would swell our article to inordinate length. His activity, however, was always tempered with wisdom. He was never betrayed into precipitate legislation. His activity was only employed when it was needed. Let our readers believe when we say that all his Departments have felt the impress of the master's hand. The Tenancy Act has been brought into operation with watchful care and sound discretion. The landholders as a class have especial reason for gratitude to their departing Chief for the leniency with which the Sale Law was carried out under his régime. Nor was the subject of irrigation absent from his thoughts. The state of the embankments and the periodicity of floods and scarcity also received his most anxious consideration and he has, we think, left on record his matured views on the subject.

Another trait of Sir Steuart deserves prominent recognition. He has been a most successful peace-maker. In smoothing away friction and reconciling contending officials, his tact and suavity have often been called into requisition, and invariably with the desired effect. But in discharging this delicate function, he has never sacrificed justice. Firmly upholding the right, he has like a father pointed out to the combatants what in the heat of their passion had escaped their observation, and bringing each to see things from a different standpoint restored harmony of relations which was indispensable to the efficient discharge of public business. In making these remarks we have in view the Cazi-like temper and attitude he assumed in the hot quarrels which some time ago broke forth between the Health-officer of the Calcutta Corporation and its higher executive, and latterly the misunderstanding between the newly appointed Excise Commissioner and the Revenue Board which but for his firm intervention might have led to a regular breach.

Taking him all in all, in Sir Steuart Bengal had a Ruler of sound judgment, firm justice, grave dignity and genuine loftiness of aim. He goes, though we would detain him, if that were possible by mere power of will. But that is not to be and we can only wish him godspeed and lengthened days of useful activity in his own land. It is no small consolation to us in our regret for his loss that the government passes into able hands. His successor comes with an established reputation for administrative capacity as well as Sir Steuart's own characteristics of strength and justice.

The croakers may still cry, What has Sir Steuart done? We answer, He has discharged his trust and fulfilled his promise. He has given good government. He did not contract for dissolving views or fire-works, and he has given none. He is no political pyrotechnist. The literary canon formulated in Pope's words, Regard the writer's end, holds good in the criticism of affairs as well as of books. Sir Steuart Bayley early announced his policy. He offered not to set the Hooghly on fire, and the sacred stream is still preserved to the people. He has not startled us by grave changes or great noises. He has not been a Reform Administration. So much the better for the people and his own reputation! We all remember the fate of Sir George Campbell and of Bengal under him. The feeling of disappointment at the absence of positive benefit and tangible results, which is nourished by a noisy section of our politicians, is an unhealthy sign. Is rest nothing tangible? Is justice not a positive good? He has given both. If anybody thinks these things easy, he does not know anything. For the first time, after thirty years, the true governors of the land were governed.

THE POLITICS OF THE ST. ANDREW'S DINNER.

THE St. Andrew's Dinner in Calcutta was not only a social but a great political success, and this was due to the Chairman. Mr. Mackay's speech is bound, or at any rate deserves, to tell in the proper quarter. An earnest and scathing and powerful attack on the Income-tax, delivered on such an occasion of festivity by the head of our mercantile society, cannot fail to show the Government what keen irritation has been caused by their recent intemperate reply to the memorial of the Chamber of Commerce for its repeal. The attack was made with no small artistic effect after a preliminary tribute of warm admiration for the Viceroy's statesmanship and high character. Mr. Mackay has earned the country's gratitude by his spirited stand against a most oppressive imposition. We do not know him personally, but he is reported to be a very kind hearted man, held in great respect by the assistants of his firm for his sympathetic treatment of those under him. He never cuts pay for late attendance or absence on leave, and such a man cannot but feel indignant at the pettiness of a device for swelling the State coffers by mulcting from the pay of such small fry. Our merchants, whatever their regrettable attitude on the holiday question, are some of the kindest masters one can wish to serve. The traditions of the generosity of the earlier Merchant-Princes still animate not a few of them who, we understand, pay the income-tax for their establishment themselves and consider it meanness to recover it from the assesseees. And it is only from such a considerate master, one could expect the graphic description of the hard lot of the mercantile clerks, and indeed of clerks in general, that no one can read in his speech without crying shame to a Government that enrich themselves at the expense of such a needy struggling class. As the people for whom the Chairman at the Scotch national anniversary so feelingly pleaded seldom look or have leisure to look into newspapers, we draw their attention to what we know many of them have not heard of, and extract the whole speech which they cannot read but with the greatest delight and thankfulness.

But humanity for the poor was not the sole or even chief ground on which the President of the Chamber of Commerce founded his argument for the repeal of the tax. He thoroughly exploded Sir David Barbour's notion that, were it not for his pet tax, the non-official community would make little or no contribution to the cost of the administration which ensured them the peace and security under which their business prospered. He showed that far from this being the case, European commerce was the mainstay of the revenue and that revenue was daily expanding with long enough strides to enable Government to strike off a tax without much difficulty which yielded only about 45 lacs. As to the conscientious scruples of officials of the higher classes not to go without contributing their own quota to the cost of the State, Mr. Mackay suggested that if they really thought their salaries were too high, which he for his part disbelieved, and that their conscience would not allow them rest without submitting to a voluntary fleecing, they might more simply effect the object by a 2½ per cent. reduction of their scale of pay.

Mr. Mackay was full of the subject and gradually warmed up and then gave the Government a bit of his mind, by remonstrating against the series of mischievous measures which have been adopted in this country to the prejudice of Indian commerce and manufactures at the instance of Lancashire. The export duties have been taken away by one stroke of the pen to suit the interests of the English manufacturer, and that having made no impression upon Indian industries, the next step is to strangle them by irritating factory legislation. Happily, the latter move is going to be abortive, the Factory Commission whose report is now published being too wideawake to be taken in by the dodge of a spurious English philanthropy. But all the same, these things show how the Government is ever ready to shape its policy at the bidding of Manchester, and the head of our Calcutta mercantile interests did well to speak out plainly and remind our easygoing Governors of "the peril to the English Power itself that is likely to follow in the path of a policy that permits the interests of this country to be prostrated to the political party pressure of England."

The other speeches generally were fully up to the mark. Dr. Crombie, in giving the toast of the "Guests," spoke with great good humour, but the smartest thing of the evening was our Governor Elect's sprightly utterance. Sir Charles Elliott made the best of the occasion and spoke in the pleasantest vein, fully repaying the hospitality of his Scotch hosts by his glowing eulogy of the sterling traits of their character as well as by a passing allusion to Lord Dufferin's epoch-making speech on the Congress, the memory of which will be ever green in the minds of Europeans in this country, and the candid friendship, if not candied, of which our countrymen would do well to lay solemnly to heart.

THE PRINCIPLES OF INDUSTRIAL WORK IN INDIA.

TO THE EDITOR.

No subject can more urgently demand, or more amply repay the study of the intelligent inquirer than the great question of Industrial Work. From the inexhaustible fountain of labor, springs all that constitutes the wealth of nations. The power, the dignity and the happiness of a people are at the same time the result and the expression of the energy and capacity for labor which characterise the race. From the wheel of the potter, from the yet ruder shed of the brick-moulder to the noblest work of the sculptor; from the rudest scratching of the soil to the highest triumph of scientific agriculture; from the first lesson of the monitor to the master speech of the statesman, all that can enrich and ennoble a nation, is bound together by the golden links of industry. The position of workmen in our country may be regarded in more standpoints than one. The questions involved come home in different ways to the workman, to the employer and to the Government. With the first, the great object of life is the acquisition of wages. To the workman, the word is synonymous with income. It implies the means of providing for his own need and for the wants of those who are dependent on his exertions. The characteristics of wages that are most important in his eyes are—first, security; second, adequacy; third, ease of acquirement. He desires to earn them with as little labor as possible. He desires that they should be as liberal in amount as possible. But his chief anxiety is that they shall always be surely forthcoming. Unfortunately, there are those among the mill-owners in the Indian factories who endeavour not only to teach, but to compel, the workman to regard his labor from a rather different point of view. The theory of competition is now invoked in a mode little contemplated by those who first promulgated it. The condition that is laid down as primary by those who attempt to organise the labourer as the opponent rather than the assistant of his employer is that the less work every man does, the more hands will be necessarily employed. Thus it is seen that the mill-hands in most places leave the factories when they have done a certain quantity of work, although, with but little extra fatigue, they might considerably increase the outcome of the day's work. Thus, there has come on a strike between the Lancashire and the Bombay factories. The assumptions that underlie the interference with the freedom of labor are that a certain quantity of work has to be performed in the year, and that it is competent to the labourer by means of combination to fix the remuneration for this work. The employer naturally regards both work and wages from a very different point of view from that of the workman. Nor is he, in his turn, less subject than the labourer to be misled by a false appreciation of his own interests. Work, to the employer, means the assistance which he requires for producing the staple of his trade. Wages means the pecuniary advances which he makes, to obtain the services of the workman. The real requirements of the employer are,—first, certitude as to the steady supply of labor; and next, fair return, both in the quality and in the quantity of work for the wages which he pays. Thus, truly regarded, the interests of the employer and of the workman are identical. But as the workman may be misled into the effort to return as little labor as possible for his wages, so the employer may be misled into the attempt to pay the lowest possible wages in return for work. The temptation is more specious and cogent in the case of the employers; for, his pay-sheet represents a definite outlay which it is not always easy punctually to discharge, and anything which diminishes that outlay presents itself under the guise of an actual saving. This may be, and often is, far from being a real saving; but the fallacy is specious and the mistake extremely natural. Thus the grasping employer endeavours to keep down wages to a minimum and the dependent workman endeavours to force them up to a maximum.

The Government regards labor as the perennial spring of national wealth, the source of national greatness, and the safeguard against national decadence. One of the first objects of the Government must be to encourage the most free and uninterrupted development of the national industrial power in this country. In the contemplated Factory Legislation, consequent upon the representations of the Lancashire, made to check the growth of Industrial work in India, the Government will no doubt err. The impulse of competition will be largely checked and, instead of an increase of a healthy, industrious, happy population, the country will groan under the pressure of a jaded, idle, miserable lot that, with the ineffective character of competitive industry, will pine away never to rise for any thing good and practical. Even bantering has its use, for it is one of the great laws of the Universe that there should be everywhere and in all things some allowance for waste of words. Meanwhile,

Thank God, say I, for any plan
To raise poor millmen's level,
Give them a chance to make them men
Or how to mar a devil.

In fact, these representations exceed the limits of bantering and they call for, as may be unhappily said in the present instance, legislative interference. There may be shortcomings in some minor points which ought to be settled among the parties themselves; but it is not very fair that loud complaints should be raised stimulating the indignation of Government against the whole fabric of industrial enterprise in India. Payment may be made earlier than now, four days' holiday may be allowed instead of two, children under twelve may be allowed to work in 'double shifts' half day at half pay; but it will be very hard to mend that unhealthy relation that continues to exist between the Lancashire factories and those in India. The great stream of public opinion will flow on, watching them and their concerns; but there are quiet corners where perhaps the current is not felt and hardly an eddy of the rushing tide stirs. If crying injustice is done in the present instance to the Bombay factories, bitterness will be the result. From what the Factory Commission has been able to ascertain, it is evident that there should be no alternative between the factories and the Government but between the mill-owners and the mill hands. There is something like the falsehood of extremes in all sharp alternatives. The principles adverted to regulating industrial enterprise, are in many cases compromised with, and measures taken to promote the interests of a special class in England, clipping at the same time the practical energies of the workmen in India. In the department of agriculture, there is room enough for improvement, should Government lend greater attention to develop it into a full growth.

J.

ST. ANDREW'S DINNER. "THE LAND WE LIVE IN."

Proposed by the Chairman Mr. James L. Mackay.

And now, Gentlemen, I come to "the land we live in," and take it altogether, I feel sure that no one present here to-night will be disposed to grudge it a toast. India, like every other country, has its good points, and it has its bad ones. To us poor dwellers in the plains, the better ones are now beginning to manifest themselves. They come in fact as the night punkah-pullers leave us, and retire as they return, but take the good points with the bad, the country, as a whole, has many redeeming features, and seems to have a wonderful attraction for the majority of men who come to it, to judge by the time that most of us remain here. (Laughter.)

And, Gentlemen, it is wonderful how bright and pleasant India sometimes seems, when viewed from a distance, even when we are in that old country for which we have such longings when exiled here. Somehow, the heat discomforts seem to get forgotten as the East winds come sweeping round the corners, and we are not indisposed to wish ourselves back in Calcutta, to revel in the balmy breezes that circle round the Golf Pavilion all through the summer nights. (Applause and laughter.)

I have said, Gentlemen, and I think you have all agreed with me, that India, for the European, has many redeeming features; but a very important one of these, which existed up to some three or four years ago, has, I am sorry to say, now disappeared. The redeeming feature I refer to, which has taken wings to itself, was the entire absence in this country of that irritating and obnoxious pest, a direct tax upon income. (Loud and continued cheering.)

Gentlemen, some little time ago, when money was wanted to fortify our frontier, and the exchequer was found to be low, when Russia was threatening us and the Eastern question was the momentous one of the day, the country was appealed to for help; we were all asked to put our shoulders to the wheel, and to agree to assist the Government by giving up to them 2½ per cent. of our incomes. The appeal was heartily responded to without demur, an Income Tax Bill was passed with almost no opposition, either from the non-official Members of His Excellency the Viceroy's Council or the Press. We were told by Lord Dufferin, in that pleasant way which was peculiarly his own (Laughter); that we had all come up to the scratch like men. We were patted on the back and assured that our conduct would be appreciated, not only by the Government of India, but by Her Majesty the Queen. (Laughter.)

Years slipped away, Gentlemen, the frontier defences were getting towards completion, the financial equilibrium had been restored, and, as is natural in human nature, we began to look for some tangible acknowledgment of our admittedly patriotic action, something beyond the pleasing platitudes applied to us by Lord Dufferin in 1886. (Applause.) To our dismay, however, instead of an easing off in the rigour of the income tax assessment, we found some months ago, that not only Indian incomes were being more rigorously taxed than before, but that profits made by merchants resident out of India, on goods sent to this country for sale, were also to be compelled to contribute their quota to the Exchequer; and that the person selling the goods in India was to be made responsible for its collection and payment. (Cries of Shame). This last move, Gentlemen, rather opened our eyes and attracted attention to the whole question of the income tax; with the result that the Government were memorialized on the subject by almost all the public bodies in India. The reply to these memorials has been recently received, and although on the one point of the attempt to tax consignors' profits, Government have given way, we are told, in pretty certain terms, that they have no intentions now of abolishing the income tax. The latter part of this reply, Gentlemen, has been received with a great amount of dissatisfaction, and I sincerely hope that the Government of India may yet see their way to reconsider their decision. (Cheers.)

Gentlemen, you have all doubtless read the reply which the Government have made to the memorial of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce. I will not detain you by going through the whole of that reply, as the document will be fully dealt with by the body to which it is addressed; but there is one point in it to which I would venture to call your attention to-night, and it is that portion where we are told that Government feel perfectly certain that the non-official community would never have permitted the Income Tax Bill to be so quietly put through the Viceroy's Council, had they held the opinions now expressed that the tax was totally unadapted to the circumstances of a country like India. (Cheers.)

I think, Gentlemen, this is scarcely the return we might have expected for the patriotism we displayed in 1886, when Government were at their wits' end to find money for the conquest and pacification of Upper Burma, and for the fortification of the North-West Frontier against the threatened Russian invasion; but it is a lesson to us for the future, which, I sincerely trust, will not be disregarded. We must remember hereafter, Gentlemen, when measures are before the Legislature, to take care that the public view of them is expressed in no uncertain voice, so that we may not lay ourselves open to be twitted, as we have been in this instance, with manufacturing arguments to suit our own new views.

Gentlemen, I have said that I hope the Government of India may yet be induced to alter their decision and to abolish the income tax altogether, and I believe this will be brought about by their being compelled in common justice and fairness to greatly extend the present exemption minimum. In England incomes of £150 a year and under are wholly exempt from payment of income tax, while incomes of from £151 to £400 a year are exempted to the extent of £120, but in India the exemption limit is only Rs. 500, or, say, £35 per annum. (Hear, hear.)

Now, Gentlemen, I take it as an axiom that a direct tax upon income should only be levied when the income is sufficiently large to admit of a considerable portion of it being spent on veritable luxuries. At home it is considered that a man with an income of £150 a year can afford no luxuries, and that, therefore, his income should not be directly taxed; but in India it is apparently considered that any one with an income of over Rs. 42 per month, or £35 per annum, is sufficiently affluent to afford both to buy luxuries and to pay income tax. (Applause and cries of Shame!)

Gentlemen, was there ever a more cruel sarcasm? Think of the thousands of poor Europeans and Eurasians existing rather than living in our large cities in India struggling and striving to keep together the bodies and souls of themselves and their families on Rs. 50 to Rs. 100 a month; yet treated as if their scanty and precarious means were affluence sufficient to enable them to pay a direct tax on their incomes! Gentlemen, the heroine of Tom Hood's "Song of the Shirt" might, with equal decency, have been called upon to pay income tax to add to her other miseries of poverty, hunger and dirt. Were the exemption limit in India raised to what it is in England, all incomes of less than Rs. 180 per month, or Rs. 2,160 a year, would be exempt from taxation; but this limit for India would, in my opinion, be in no respect analogous to the limit in England, so far as Europeans are concerned. (Hear, hear.) It must be remembered that the expenses of living in this country for Europeans are far in excess of what they are in England, and that the contingencies are very much greater. The pay of Europeans, consequently, must be higher here than in England, and must include a margin to meet contingencies. In calculating, therefore, what income in India would be the equivalent of £150 a year at home, all the liabilities to which a man's income in India are subject, which do not exist in England, ought to be taken into consideration, and if this be done, I think you will mostly agree with me when I say that, to put us on a par with England, the exemption limit in India, for Europeans at any rate, ought to be raised to not less than Rs. 300 or Rs. 400 per month, or the equivalent of £300 or £400 a year. (Cheers.) As regards the exemption limit for Natives of this country, it may be argued that their expenses being so much lighter than Europeans', the exemption limit for them might be lower, and this I am not prepared to dispute, but it would never do to have one rule for the European and another for the Native, and the proper course would be to make the exemption limit alike for all, as it is now. (Applause.)

The present exemption limit even for Natives, however, is far too low, especially for those resident or employed in the Presidency towns, where expenses are necessarily very heavy. I venture to think, Gentlemen, the average Native clerk employed in a mercantile or Government office in Calcutta, and drawing from Rs. 50 to Rs. 100 per month, burdened as he probably is with the maintenance of a number of relatives, in addition to a large family of his own, has seldom one rupee to rub against another, far less to spend on luxuries. Ground down by poverty, hard worked all day, with a long journey to make at night before he reaches his home at 7 or 8 o'clock, and then faced by the necessity of having to start again early next morning, his weary round going on day after day, week after week, and year after year,—who can wonder if the unfortunate man comes to regard the income tax collector as little better than a Turkish oppressor, when he makes him regularly disgorge a share of his miserable monthly pittance? A direct tax upon income ought not to be levied from men such as these; the limit of exemption ought to be raised to exclude the poor. (Applause.)

And then, Gentlemen, comes the point: If the exemption limit is raised to a proper level, there will be so little left to collect, that it will not be worth the cost of collection. One of the objects of a direct tax upon incomes should be to reach the drones in the hive, the men who, while enjoying large inheritances, go through this life without doing a hand's turn to benefit either themselves or their neighbours; but in India the greater part, in fact virtually the whole, of the revenue from income tax is obtained, not from the idle rich, but from the industrious poor; because, apart from the wealthy Natives who derive their incomes from land, and who are consequently exempt from payment of income tax, there are practically no rich people in India; and the tax is, therefore, altogether unsuited to the conditions of the country. (Cheers.) From the latest returns on this subject, published by Government, it will be seen that of the 294,000 non-officials who paid income tax in 1886, only 30,000 had incomes of over Rs. 2,000, or £140 per annum. It consequently comes to this; if the exemption minimum is raised to the point to which I believe Government will be forced to raise it, so as to exclude the veritable poor and needy, there will be practically no one left to tax, and the tax, as a whole, will have to be abolished. (Loud cheering.)

Gentlemen, in our fight with the Government of India on this subject, we stand at an unfortunate disadvantage, because it would be to the personal interest of every member of the Government, from His Excellency the Viceroy downwards, to have the tax abolished; and this being the case we have to encounter that stern determination to shun the very appearance of evil, which strongly characterizes the Government of this country and the Civil Service of India, and makes them stand out in a pre-eminent light before the whole civilized world. I am disposed to think that we are chiefly indebted to what I venture to call the mistaken conscientious scruples of a high financial authority, for whom we all entertain the greatest respect, for the resolution to endeavour to retain the income tax as a permanent institution. (Applause.) That high authority has, I believe, got the impression that well-to-do non-officials and officials in this country would contribute a scandalously inadequate share of taxation were they freed from income tax. This may or may not be true as regards officials, but it seems to me that the procedure for reducing their salaries by means of an income tax is after all a cumbersome and clumsy one. (Laughter.) If the salaries of officials in this country are considered too high, which I by no means think they are, the difficulty in their cases could be got over by simply reducing them 2½ per cent., but as regards business-men, it is a fallacy to suppose that their contributions to the revenue, if the income tax were abolished, would be confined to the duty on the salt they eat, on the liquor they drink, and on the kerosine oil they burn. Every business transaction they put through is liable to heavy indirect taxation, in the shape of stamp duties, while they and their operations are the backbone of the telegraphs, the Post Office and the railways. (Cheers.) Were there no mercantile community in India, there would be no revenue, trade is the mainstay of the country, and to harass and discourage traders is to sicken or kill the bird which lays the golden eggs. (Cheers.)

Gentlemen, we used to hear a good deal of the cry in former years at home, that India ought to be administered for the Indians; but it seems to me that some of our friends on the other side are turning round a little now, and are more inclined to shout that India ought to be administered, not for the Indians, but for the inhabitants of Lancashire. This change in view has, to my mind, brought about the great interest that has recently been taken by the good people at home in the question of Indian Factory Legislation. It is perfectly true that a deputation from Oldham which recently waited on Lord Cross, and strongly urged upon him the necessity for making more stringent rules for the working of factories in India, were careful to assure His Lordship that their object was absolutely unselfish, and that they were moved solely by a desire to benefit their brother-workers in India; but I am, I am sorry to say, sceptical enough to entertain some very grave doubts as to the sincerity of the motives advanced by that deputation. It seems to me that there are many fields in England, possibly in Lancashire itself, in which the plough of philanthropy might be better plied with advantage than in India, and that India might well be left to take care of herself till such time, at any rate, as England has made some further strides up the hill of perfection. (Applause.) No doubt the proposed Factory Law Amendment Bill will be carefully watched in its progress through the Legislative Council by those who are interested in the subject, as well as by the commercial representatives on the Council; but we must take care, guided by the interpretation put upon our action in 1886 in regard to the Income Tax Bill, that we do not fail to let our views be thoroughly well known, so that there may be no mistake made as to what they really are.

I am a little inclined to think, Gentlemen, that the Government of India are more or less at one with the opinion held by the public here, on the subject of this cry for fresh factory legislation, which is coming from the other side; and that we shall find them combating any attempt that may be made to strangle Indian manufactures, by means of regulations not needed in this country. Probably we shall have some rules proposed for the better protection of the young against possible oppression by parents desirous of benefiting by the results of their children's labour before the children are physically fit to work, and to wholesome rules of this nature, always provided they are simple and consistent with the conditions of life in this country, no reasonable objection can be taken. But Government will require all the support that public opinion here can give them to resist being driven further than is necessary by the pressure which will be brought to bear from the other side, under the weight of the possibility of losing the Lancashire Vote. (Loud cheers.)

Gentlemen, the time has come when a decided stand ought to be made by all who have the true welfare of this country at heart, against the gradual and increasing disposition which is being displayed to subordinate the interests of India to those of England. Some few years ago we had the import duties, which no one felt oppressive, removed by a stroke of the pen to benefit the English manufacturer; and a year or two later we had the income tax imposed to take the place of those duties. The abolition of import duties having failed to suppress indigenous industries, the next step taken is calculated to hamper manufacturing in India, by forcing Government to introduce fresh factory legislation. (Cheers of Shame!)

Gentlemen, I am no groaning pessimist, but I venture to predict that no inconsiderable peril to the British Power in India will follow in the path of a policy that permits the interests of this country to be thus so palpably prostrated to the political party pressure of England. I trust, for the sake of the "Land we now live in," as well as for the sake of the land in which we hope to spend our declining days, that a lesson will be taken before it is too late, not only from the history of the downfall of that dynasty which ruled India in by-gone years, but also from what led to the severance from Great Britain of that mighty land and people across the Western Ocean. The time has come, Gentlemen, when the Government of India, as regards their fiscal policy and internal administration, ought to have the same free hand as is enjoyed by the Colonies of the South. (Loud cheers.)

To turn, Gentlemen, from such prosaic subjects as income tax and uncalled for factory legislation, subjects which are sometimes calculated to make us wish this were not "the land we lived in," I would like to say a word about the country before I have done with it, which may incline your hearts to give a cordial reception to my toast. As I have already said this evening, India is a country which, when once it gets hold of a man, seldom seems to let him go under the best part of his lifetime. Few men manage to shake themselves clear of India under a quarter of a century, and it therefore behoves everyone who comes to the country to try and make the best of it, and this, I think on the whole, we somehow manage to do. And what is the consequence? After a certain time of life, when the pleasures of hope have waned, and realization has not proved all that we expected, we find we have what no one can ever rob us of, namely, a large store of the pleasures of memory. (Laughter.)

When we come to look back upon our Indian lives, we find that they have been exceedingly pleasant ones. Our friends have been kind and true, our enemies, if we have had any, have always been generous, and I venture to say, Gentlemen, there are few amongst us who, if they had their lives to live over again, would not elect for "the Land we live in." Gentlemen, I ask you to fill your glasses and to drink a bumper to His Excellency our Viceroy Lord Lansdowne and "the Land we live in."

SIR CHARLES ELLIOTT'S REPLY TO THE TOAST "OUR GUESTS."

The Hon. Sir Charles Elliott, who was received with loud long continued cheers, said:—Mr. Chairman,—Dr. Crombie has done me the honour to couple my name with this toast, and I rise therefore to perform the pleasant duty of expressing, on behalf of your guests of to-night, their thanks for the hospitality you have shown them and for the kind and patronising things which Dr. Crombie has said in his speech concerning them. His remarks recalled to me the feelings with which, when I was an undergraduate at the University, I heard a college don say of non-university people in a compassionate and sympathising tone: "They also are God's creatures." (Laughter.) Up to that time the idea had hardly been grasped by me that men not at the University could be God's creatures at all, and this remark threw a flood of new light into my mind. Perhaps Dr. Crombie may have passed through a similar experience, and this may explain his present attitude towards the forlorn and feeble folk who have been born on the wrong side of the border, and has led him to recognise in us the claims of a common humanity; and for this charming condescension the guests of to-night feel deeply grateful. (Laughter.) I wish for their sakes that the Chairman could have provided them with a more eloquent representative, one more able to cope with and emulate the perfervid Scotch spirit and the gift of oratory which so many of the speeches of to-night have displayed. I fear that any claim that I might make to be a descendant of the remaining "little Jock Elliott," and that my ancestors on the border harried the land and folk of the forbears of the gentlemen I see around me, would hardly increase my claim to their sympathy, and might lead to retaliatory measures which would scarcely conduce to the harmony of the evening. (Laughter.) But at least I can claim this as the representative of your guests, that, however halting I may be in expression, I am second to no one as regards the feeling of gratitude for the large and liberal hospitality of which we have been partakers; and in the term hospitality I include, not merely the excellent, and sometimes curious, Scotch dainties with which the skill and ingenuity of the Land o' Cakes has loaded the table, but also the spirit of friendliness and camaraderie with which you have allowed us, Southerners and strangers as most of us are, to penetrate into the mysteries of your sacred day, and to worship with you at the shrine of Scotland's Saint (Applause.) The best return I can make for this hospitality is by saying that it leaves us, like Oliver Twist, wishing for more: not more in the present tense (for I am sure that any guest whose inner man is not satisfied can only have himself to blame), but more in the future tense—more happy returns of such an occasion when friendly sentiments can be exchanged and home recollections revived (Applause.) These St. Andrew's dinners have often been events of great political importance. The last occasion on which I was present here as a guest was two years ago, when the retiring Viceroy, Lord Dufferin, delivered a speech of the greatest weight, summing up the political experience acquired during his tenure of office, and imparting to us his views on the great Congress question, showing within what limits the aspirations of the educated section of the people of this country could be granted with safety and profit to this empire, and beyond what limits they ought not to be allowed to go. (Applause.)

Last year, I understand, no St. Andrew's dinner was held, but what the good Saint thought of this abstinence from usual observances in his honour, I as a mere Southern do not presume to enquire. (Laughter.) This year, though no such epoch-making speech as Lord Dufferin's has been delivered, a great deal has been said which every one interested in the welfare of India will do well to lay to heart. And even apart from this, it is no slight gain that so many sections of the English community of Calcutta have met together in furtherance of the spirit of mutual understanding, amity, and expansion of heart. To a mind like my own, that is accustomed to brood with foreboding and anxiety on the vast weight of Empire that lies on our shoulders, on the greatness of the task and the fewness of the labourers, and especially on the isolation of our District Officers, who are the eyes and hands of Government, and who often are placed in solitary parts, as I have been placed myself, one white man to half a million of Natives of India—to such a mind it is a refreshment to look round on this sea of white faces who represent all that is energetic and all that is reforming and life-giving in the principles on which the administration of India by England is based, and to reflect on that great store-house of energy and mental growth, and noble self-devotion, our dear Mother Island, from which, if we should fail, thousands more are ready to stream forth to take our place. (Applause.)

With regard to myself, I can only thank Dr. Crombie and you, Gentlemen, who have applauded his sentiments, for the kind expressions he has used about me. We have Biblical authority for the warning that "he who girdeth on his armour must not boast himself like him who putteth it off," and there can hardly be any time in his life when a man is oppressed by a keener sense of his shortcomings than when he is about to enter on so great an office as that which has been conferred on me (Hear, hear, and applause.) I am deeply impressed by the difficulties of the post, and also with the truth of what Dr. Crombie has said as to the qualities which are wanted in order that one should bear oneself worthily as holder of such a post. Whether I possesses them or not time will show; but at least I am grateful to you all for your confidence that I do possess them. Believe me, there can be no greater stimulus to a public man to do well than the belief of his countrymen in him that he will do well, and I can assure you that the recollections of what has been said to-day will remain in my mind, and will be a stimulus and encouragement to me during my term of office. (Loud applause.)

THE CHAIRMAN'S HEALTH.

And now, Gentlemen, I have only a few words to add in performance of another and very congenial duty, which is to propose the health of our Chairman. (Cheers.) At so late an hour of the night I will not venture to detain you long, and indeed it is not necessary that I should say much on the subject of a gentleman so well-known and so much respected in Calcutta as Mr. Mackay. On his public life as President of the Chamber of Commerce, and as a leading member of the commercial community of this town, this would not be the place to dwell. Of his merits as a Scotchman you are much better judges than I, though I profess myself a devout believer in them. But as the Chairman of a great social meeting like this, I may be permitted to say that he has shone with unequalled lustre, and that the geniality and urbanity with which he has presided on this occasion will long be remembered as the chief cause of the complete success of this most pleasant function. (Loud Cheers.)

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

PUTTING UP THE BANNS.

Two brothers in a Northern village,
Had wealthy grown on flocks and tillage,
For both were prudent men and thrifty,
And on the shady side of fifty,
So like they were to one another,
Brother might well have passed for brother.

Alike in form and face and tone
They differed but in this alone,
Thomas for years had had a wife,
While John lived still a single life.

Tom's wife was gentle, loving, kind,
Suited exactly to his mind,
So pleasantly his days ran on,
He often pitied lonely John.

"How is it Jack?"—he said one day,
As they were walking by the way,—
"That thou saw long thasen has carried,
And never thowt o' getting married?"

"How is it," John replied, "Loord saäve me.
I doänt know any one 'ud haave me,"
"Not have thee, Jack! there's Martha Brown,
Tha knows as lives a'top o'toon.
A booncin', booxom dame as any,
And knows to toorn and saave a penny,
She's joost thoine age, I've 'eer'd it said,
And her goodman has noo bean dead
Foor year, an' martinmas coom roond,
Shea'd haave tha, gladly, I'll be boond."

"Dos't think shea will?" his brother cried,
"Think! naw I'se sewer ou't," Tom replied.
"Whoy then," says John, "I weant delay,
I'll goa put oop the banns to-daay."

This purpose settled in his mind,
Away he went the clerk to find,
Who wrote the intended marriage down,
Between John Stubs and Martha Brown:
And further, be it briefly said,
In church the banns were duly read.

On Monday, Martha said her prayers,
And drest herself and came downstairs,
Her breakfast ate of eggs and pork,
Then set about her daily work.
When, in the midst of household labour,
She saw drop in her next door neighbour,
Who said:—"Why Martha is it thrue
They tell about John Stoops and thoo?"

From hoose to hoose the news is carried,
That you're boath goan to be married."

"Naw, naw, tha silly thing, be easy!
I think the folks are growin' crazy,
Or else thoo's got tha noddle broken,
Whoy John and I have hardly spoken."

"Well, but the banns I'eer wur read."
"Banns read! read wheer?" poor Martha said.
The gossip answered with some scorn,
"Read? Whoy in choorch but yeaster moorn,
And that thoo knows I do na' doot it,
Oanly tha' are so sloy about it."

Thereat a second neighbour came,
And soon a third, and each the same
Strange question asked and tidings brought,
Till Martha, quite confounded thought
The thing was getting past a joke,
And rather angrily she spoke:—
"You've all come heare, I plaanely seea,
To troy and manke a fool o' meea,
But noo I've summat else to do
Than leasten to such stoops as you,
Saw you may e'en joost step awaay,
And keep your jests till All Fool's Day."

Her neighbours gone, she thought it o'er,
But only grew perplexed the more;
So put her cloak and bonnet on,
And went to have a word with John.

"Why John, what's this? I 'eer it saaid,
That ycasterdaay the banns were read
In choorch, betwixt tha' sen an' me,
I want to know the rights o' theea."

"And saw the banns were read," said John.
"Wur read!" said Martha taking on,
"Was ever woman woorse deroided?
"Whaw put them oop?"—says John—"Whny I did."
"Thoo did! I gaave tha naw permission!"

John found he'd made a slight omission,—
"Coom Martha, doant taake on," he said,
"For thaw the banns in choorch wur read,
It's not saw bad but weea can stop it,
I'll goa an' tell the clark to dhrop it."

"Well, naw," said Martha, changing tone,
"Noo that the thing saw fur has goane,
And all the folks haave 'eered it, John,
I think it may joost e'en goa on!"

NEWS AND OUR COMMENTS.

THE Viceroy returned to Government House on Tuesday. A cordial welcome awaited His Excellency on the grand staircase.

THE Levée comes off on Tuesday, the 16th December, at 9-30 P. M. The particulars will be found in the advertisement elsewhere.

The Levée was announced as early as September 1890, while the Viceroy was at Simla and had not started on his tour. But that was too early. There has been a change since then in the last day for sending in the cards. The fresh notification was issued on Tuesday, the day of his Excellency's arrival in Calcutta, and appeared in the morning papers of the next day. This late appearance of the notification, we are afraid, may interfere with the attendance at the Levée. It left too short a time for distant gentlemen to send in their cards. Before the present notification appeared, there were enquiries as to the last day, but we were in no better position than the enquirers. That shews the necessity of earlier announcement and wider publicity. It was different last year. The notification appeared two weeks, and there was no cause for annoyance.

THE Council of Regency of Rampur has laid a horse and camel dak between Rampur and Moradabad.

SPECULATIONS, especially in the Mahomedan community, as to the next native members of the Bengal Legislative Council have been set at rest. Both Dr. Rashbehary Ghosh and Prince Ferroksh Shah have been re-elected. Sir Henry Harrison and Mr. Allen too have been granted another term. The only new member is Mr. A. H. Wallis, of Messrs. Manton & Co. The Council meets to-day. It will be the last when Sir Steuart Bayley presides.

THE Secretary of State has sanctioned the post of Deputy Secretary in the Home Department. It will be filled by Mr. J. P. Hewett, the Under Secretary, who for some time acted as Private Secretary to Lord Dufferin.

MR. Henvey lays down his office with the close of the year. Mr. Robert Crosthwaite, C.S.I., succeeds as Agent to the Governor-General for Central India.

THE Chief Justice nominated and the Governor-General has accepted the Hon'ble Prince Ferroksh Shah as Sheriff in succession to Mr. H. B. H. Turner. He will make a grand Sheriff in his native costume. The Prince knows how to dress and looks well even in the European costume. But in Oriental Durbar robes he is truly princelike.

Our friend is a lucky man. His services in the Bengal Council have been so appreciated that Government have asked him to remain and have reappointed him to it. We can only wish him success all round.

DR. KOCH still keeps his lymph for the treatment of tuberculosis a secret. It is a brownish transparent liquid and is injected subcutaneously between the shoulder blades and the lumbar region. A healthy man does not feel it, but a suffering patient complains of a severe general reaction—of feverishness, pain in the limbs, cough, fatigue and vomiting. These commence four hours after the administration and continue for fifteen hours, when they begin to abate and totally disappear in favorable cases. If his cure stands trial, a new and fruitful channel will be opened for improvement in practical medicine.

THE elevation of Mr. Knox, the Legal Remembrancer, to the Allahabad High Court Bench has caused dissatisfaction in the N. W. P. The Pioneer is informed that the Local Government pressed the appointment though powerfully opposed at the India office. According to the same paper, it has been a surprise to the entire Civil Service and the Bar. Our contemporary, however, is prepared to be reconciled to it on the supposition that Government mean to abolish the office of Legal Remembrancer.

THE last act of Colonel Prideaux as Political Resident at Jeypore, was to announce a donation of Rs. £20,000 to the Imperial Institute in London, out of the Jeypore Treasury. The gracious acceptance of the offer by the Prince of Wales is no ordinary satisfaction to the Durbar and the Maharaja. The offer was at once a tribute to Imperial Royalty and a memorial to the retiring Resident.

WE read:—

"'Lover Stationery' is one of the newest ideas in note paper in America. The watermark is a blending of two hearts pierced by an arrow. On the lower corner of the last page appears a little mark which is intended to denote the kissing spot. It is covered with an aromatic gum which is said to impart to the lips an agreeable odour and taste."

And no sign of a church or altar or priest? not even a mark of a registrar's office?

ACCORDING to German analysts, the apple contains more phosphorus than any other fruit or vegetable—known, we believe, in Germany. Now phosphorus is calculated to renew the essential nervous matter, lethon of the brain and spinal cord. Its acids also serve a very useful purpose. They eliminate from the body noxious matters, which, if retained, would make the brain heavy and dull, or bring about jaundice or skin eruptions and other allied troubles. They have a distinct action on a sluggish liver and are valuable to men of sedentary habits.

THE judgment of the Madras High Court (published in our issue of Nov. 29) on the validity of infant marriage, is an unexpected blow to the agitation for raising the age of consent. Already, the ardour of the Pioneer has cooled down. It writes:—

"We have more than once expressed the opinion that the reform of the Indian marriage laws is both possible and desirable. But we have never disguised the fact that the subject is one surrounded by many difficulties; that if it is to be approached at all, great caution is necessary; and that whatever is done, it will not be possible to change the essential character of the Hindu marriage as a religious ceremony. Since Mr. Malabari went to England, however, the professional reformer has got hold of the question, and, as usual, he treats it as if there were no difficulty at all; as if marriage being spelt one way both in India and in England, the law regarding it should in all respects be the same. Take, for instance, Cardinal Manning's article in the New Review. There is much in it to which no objection need be taken, but there is evidence also that the Cardinal has missed the feature of Hindu marriage which is most characteristic and makes reform most difficult. 'What,' asks the Cardinal, 'as to the subsequent marriage, which on the average takes place at the age of seven, and of thousands at an earlier age? Neither in these can there be voluntary and intelligent consent. Therefore, there can be no marriage, because, by the law of nature, marriage is a voluntary and perpetual contract of which the contracting parties are the true ministers.' The law of nature is a thing which well-meaning people have, at various times and in various countries, interpreted in very diverse ways; but whatever the interpretation we adopt, it will not help us to solve the marriage problem in India. Marriage is not here a voluntary contract, but a religious ceremony of which the ministers are not the husband and wife, but the priest and the parents. In the Madras High Court the other day, the Justices clearly affirmed that the consent of the wife was not a point which has to be considered. It is not merely that this is law, but that it expresses the sentiments of the people. If we can make such changes—and we believe we can—as will prevent some of the evils which accompany the present system, well and good; but we shall only increase the resistance to any change whatever, if the idea gets abroad that we wish the Hindu to revolutionise the whole character of the marriage ceremony and radically alter his notions regarding it."

THE Secretary of State for India has addressed the following despatch to the Governor-General of India on the subject of Indian litigants in England:—

"From time to time Natives of India, mostly from the Punjab, who have been unsuccessful litigants in the Indian Courts, have come to this country in the hope of obtaining from Her Majesty a reversal of decrees or orders, and in ignorance of the fact that no appeal lies in this country against the decisions of Indian Courts, except an appeal in due form to the Privy Council.

2. Much inconvenience (and at times some public scandal) is caused by these men, whose means usually become speedily exhausted, leaving them in a condition of pauperism. It has hitherto been the rule of this Office (to which, however, there have been exceptions) to decline to send these persons back to India at the public expense; and they not unfrequently find their way either into prison as vagrants or into the workhouse as destitute mendicants—a state of things which is the more regrettable as many of them are, in fact, respectable men, who, through ignorance, have incurred great expense and personal hardship in coming here bonâ fide in search of what they consider to be justice.

3. It appears to me necessary that whatever steps are practicable should be taken to put a stop to this state of things; and I suggest, for the consideration of your Excellency in Council, whether it would not be well that (especially in the Punjab and Northern Provinces) a notification in the vernacular languages should be posted up in every Court and Police station, and otherwise made public, informing suitors that appeals from the decisions of the Courts do not lie in England except the ordinary appeals to the Privy Council, and that no petitioners, other than appellants to the Privy Council prosecuting their appeals according to the prescribed rules, will obtain any hearing in England from Her Majesty. A warning might be added that petitioners coming to this country merely waste their money and expose themselves to great inconvenience and hardships, with the risk of being unable ever to return to their native country.

4. I have resolved that, in future, whenever I may find it necessary that any men of this class should be repatriated by this office, expenses incurred on their behalf shall be debited to the Province to which they may belong."

THE Tribune of the 6th December publishes, on the authority of a correspondent, the re-entry at Batala into Hinduism of one Kunj Lal, a convert to Christianity. "Many members of the Biradari and others," we are told, "dined with Kunj Lal to shew that they had no objection to his being again made a Hindu." But does that complete the reversion?

MISS FLORENCE ST. JOHN, of the Gaiety Theatre, sued a sporting paper for the remark that to advertise herself she pretended the loss of her jewels. She was awarded by the Judge £300 damages.

THE largest pin factory is the Newhall Works, Birmingham, turning out an average of 10,000,000 a day. In Great Britain, about 1500 tons of iron and brass wire are annually manufactured into pins.

A GERMAN chemist is said to have prepared a preserving fluid, which, injected into a dead hare, rendered it fresh meat after six weeks. This fluid was put into the body of the late Emperor William I. This ought to be injected before burial into all bodies where there is suspicion of foul play.

NOTES, LEADERETTES, AND OUR OWN NEWS.

PARLIAMENT has risen and stands adjourned till the 22nd January.

THE split in the Irish camp widens. The majority have appointed Mr. Justin MacCarthy Chairman of the party, but the minority still cling to Mr. Parnell. The Parnellites number 31 while those who wish Mr. Parnell to go out are 54 strong. Messrs. Dillon, Healy, W. O'Brien, Arthur and Thomas O'Connor, Sheehy, Sexton and Abraham have been appointed a Consulting Committee of the anti-Parnellites. The Irish Bishops have condemned Mr. Parnell. He, however, still rules the Irish heart. He arrived at Dublin on the 10th. An enthusiastic welcome awaited him at Kingstown, while Mr. Healy, who arrived simultaneously, was booed. In the forenoon, the ex-Irish leader entered, in the capacity of a Director, the office of the United Ireland newspaper, with a Sheriff's officer, to obtain possession of it. In going up the staircase they were opposed. A sharp scuffle with sticks and stools ensued. At length, however, Mr. Parnell succeeded in ejecting the editor and seizing the offices and plant, and thus receiving the submission of the staff. In the afternoon, he addressed a crowded meeting at the Rotunda and attributed the hostile movement against him to hypocrisy, ignorance and one-sided testimony. In reply, the anti-Parnellites issued a manifesto justifying their deposition of Mr. Parnell in the interest of Ireland. They justly complain that their chief had not redeemed his pledge of clearing his character. They, then, in the small hours past midnight, surprised and forced themselves into the premises of the United Ireland, took possession of the office, papers, &c., in the name of Mr. William O'Brien, and left a strong guard to protect the place. That was no easy matter. The stronghold of Celtic culture and patriotism—the rendezvous of injured Irishism—was an object dear to both parties. Neither Mr. Parnell and his followers nor the anti-Parnellites were prepared to surrender the dear name of United Ireland or the hallowed local habitation of the organ of the nation, without a struggle. Accordingly, the next day, the office was again invested by a fresh Parnellite host. Mr. Parnell himself led the attack, routed the sentry, broke open the door with a crowbar, and took possession once more. Mr. Parnell claims to be a Director of the paper, but Mr. Dillon from America denies his right.

GOVERNMENT having no work for Sir John Pope Hennessy, he is preparing to enter Parliament. He is a candidate for North Kilkenny and sides with the anti-Parnellites. Mr. Parnell has set up a candidate named Scully to oppose him. The Roman Catholic Clergy of Kilkenny are favoring Sir John. He is a man of great ability, energy, and persistence, and may prove as inconvenient a customer to the powers that be as the late Chisholm Anstey. His wide experience ought to prove valuable to the House. We hope he will be returned. He is a friend of the native races in Greater Britain and of justice generally.

ALEXANDER MILLER succeeds Sir Andrew Scoble as Law Member.

BARON HUDDLESTONE and Charles Marvin are dead. The former left a wish to be cremated.

SRIMAN SWAMI, the Apostle of kine preservation, died at Pushkar of fever. A native of the South, he, like another Sankar, worked his way up to the North, conquering and subduing men to his movement. He was a remarkable man—of great ability as well as courage—of a strong will and untiring perseverance. What his particular views were we do not know, but that they were distinctly personal we came to think on his first long day with us. He had taken up a cry highly popular with Hindus, Jains, Parsees, and Buddhists, and generally plausible. But it was an impracticable, certainly an unreasonable one. In fact Sriman's, though he was too much in earnest to see it, was a mischievous business. His death is a relief. We only hope he has left no chelas fit to set an insensate law against us for saying the truth. If he has, they will not want lawyers. We could recommend one who will be glad to eat us up, editor and paper, types, printing press, ink roller, and all.

UNDER pressure of his people, Mr. Guntz has declined the honor of the Chair of the Congress, after having accepted the offer. This was a fresh disappointment to the Committee. They had, after no small trouble, secured the President of the Eurasian Association of the South, and they were in a fix. They had rummaged all the quarters and exhausted all their powers of discovery. No new European or Asiatic ally being visible, the Committee fell back on their own bottom, and have drawn a President out of their foundation material. Mr. Pherozeshah Mehta, of Bombay, will preside. Two Parsee Presidents within six years is, no doubt, a confession of general poverty and barrenness. But there is neither room for experiments nor time for angling. The Hour is at hand and the Man should be ready—and we must be sure of our man. We can always depend upon the Mehtas. The gentleman of that ilk on whom the choice has fallen, will not fail at the last moment, or at the trial, or thereafter. Mr. P. Mehta is one of our ablest men.

In the same way, on Mr. Manomohan Ghose has devolved the duty of formally receiving the Delegates. He is an excellent man, only too apt even in society to have his head full of briefs. For once, we hope, he will not leave his mind at court.

IN connection with a town magisterial case appealed against the judgment of an Honorary Presidency Magistrate, the High Court has drawn the attention of the Chief Magistrate to the insufficiency of record in cases tried by the Presidency Magistrates. Where imprisonment is awarded, the law requires that the magistrate shall record a brief statement of the reasons for conviction. The High Court points out that, in the absence of the reasons, it is not possible for the Judges to deal with a case as a court of appeal under section 421 of the Criminal Procedure Code, so as to ascertain whether or not there are prima facie sufficient grounds for interference either with the conviction or the sentence. The Magistrates are reminded, that the High Court is, by their omission, "deprived of the power of acting summarily," with the further result of waste of public time and unnecessary expense to parties concerned.

That order of the High Court throws additional burden on the Chief Magistrate. He must supervise more carefully and oftener the doings of all the Police Courts, and exercise greater discretion in the selection of presiding Honorary Magistrates.

There is no end of attorneys, barristers, pleaders and retired deputy magistrates in the list of Honorary Magistrates, who usually preside. Honorary justice is of a piece with the proverbial Justices' Justice. But surely the record of these legal and ex-deputy-magisterial "worships" might be expected to be more in accordance with the law.

The Goths completed what the Priest began.

With the Cazi—the Mahomedan Judge—the Hindu has no festivals—no need for leave. So says a well-known Bengali proverb. The Shams-ul-Olema Mohesh Chunder gave his fatwa that the Hindus did not require more than four days for the pooja of their Goddess Doorga. The Government of aliens accepted the advice and ordered the stoppage of public business accordingly, allowing, as a grace for the present, holiday in their offices, excepting some specially named, during the remaining days of the autumnal vacation. The only India Offices in Calcutta thus excepted were those of Issue of the Paper Currency Department and of the Comptroller and Auditor-General. That proved a signal for rude raids not only against the Doorga Pooja holidays but also against the other Poojas of the Hindoos. Improving upon the order of the Governor-General in Council, the Deputy Director, Indian Marine, thought himself justified in ignoring altogether the Hindu holidays. The entire staff of the establishment at the Government Kidderpore Dockyard had to attend on the 13th October, the Mahalya. Excepting Sundays, from the 18th to 29th October—the Gazetted Doorga Pooja vacation—for not a single day was the office closed. For the three days only, the 20th, 21st and 22nd October, the number of Hindu clerks were, out of the 48 total, limited to 2, 4 and 2, respectively. We don't know whether Mr. Campbell is a koul. If he had scant courtesy for the auspicious though warlike daughter of the Hills, his stiff Northern soul was moved to some measure of respect for the grim Amazon whose worship follows hers. The first day of the Kali Pooja was wholly ignored; but on the 2nd day, the 12th November, a partial holiday was granted. During the following Juggodhatri Pooja, on the 20th and 21st November, there was no holiday. In justice to Mr. Campbell, it must be said, that he did not pursue the poor people who would not attend with Calvinistic fire and sword. During the above days, a very insignificant number of assistants who could not possibly be present at the office during the holidays, were not threatened with fine, but allowed to be absent on sick leave. We may as well mention that during these 15 days, out of the total 8,237 attendances of artificers, the Hindu attendances numbered 6,746.

In the Accountant-General's Office, Mr. Kiernander issued his own orders superseding the Government Notification. His office was not excepted from the general notification. Yet during the Doorga Poojas he kept open two of the Departments, allowing the Hindu assistants to absent themselves only during the four grandest days. More assistants had to attend most of the departments during the Kali Pooja. The whole of the Treasury Accounts Department was not allowed a holiday to celebrate the Juggodhatri Pooja, such only of the assistants who had no arrears on hand being permitted to keep away from their desks. Yet, he is a most loyal and obedient servant of Government. He would not allow half holiday on the occasion of the last lunar eclipse, as in other Government offices, because there was no Government order either for a whole or a half holiday.

The Chief Commissariat Officer, Calcutta, allowed only four days holidays during the Doorga Poojas. He would not close his office during the Gazetted days of the Lukhi, the Kali and the Juggodhatri Poojas. He threatened an assistant who wanted leave on account of the Pooja at his house with fine.

Even at Simla, where the din of the Pooja is unheard, they respect the Doorga Pooja holidays. The permanent offices are, we believe, granted four days, and to make up the remaining eight, some of the offices are allowed a holiday every Saturday from the middle of August.

VENEZUELA appears early to have established a Leper retreat on an island. Applications came in due course from the isolated community there for permission to marry. There was no disposition to grant it, from obvious inexpediency of multiplying the victims of disease by breeding under state patronage. In fact, there were both physiological and economical objections. At last, after some years' discussion the authorities were induced to relent, and permitted the poor exiles the chance of lightening the burden of their aggravated loneliness. This was done only on the assumption that interleper unions must be barren. The permission was granted and many marriages took place. A year passed, and another, and yet another, but though marriages multiplied, there were no visible fruits in the expansion of population. The barren doctors sang their triumph over their old fogey brethren who had raised the alarm of the multiplication of a diseased breed of humans. The good authorities were glad to have been able to do such good without incurring additional responsibilities. Their satisfaction has not, however, been enduring. After all, the lepers have begun to carry out the command of Nature and Revelation, to increase and multiply. At least there have, within the last fourteen years, been two births. Luckily, both issues are thoroughly satisfactory. They were not only sound at birth but have not developed any trace of the hereditary disease as yet. It were manifestly unfair and indeed cruel to confine them—fine strapping lads now—to the miserable island of their birth. Efforts have long been making for their emancipation. Every humane man will be glad to learn that one of them, a boy of fourteen, has, on the recommendation of a medical board, been allowed to pass into the mainland and take his place in society.

THE most interesting present to old Moltke on his 90th birthday, was probably what came from the Lilliputian State of Bremen. The senate of that free town voted him a too bottles of prime Rhenish of their own renowned cellar. Over and above the sentiments shared by them with all Germans, these senators have a local reason for gratitude to the Iron Count. Indeed, the Saviour of the Country is the Saviour of Wine. He has certainly saved the fat of the noble drink—its nationality and caste. In punishing the ambition of Napoleon III. and dissipating for ever French pretensions, Moltke has not only preserved the full Rhenish integrity of the wine, but also established the absolute Germanity of the Rhine itself. That is what they meant when, in sending their present, the Senate wrote to the Count saying that they desired to do honour to the man who has helped more than any other, to change the river Rhine, on the banks of which this wine grew, from Germany's frontier into Germany's own river.

THE fifth or the last Criminal Session of the year was opened by Mr. Justice Pigot on Monday. The cases in the calendar numbered seventeen—seven of theft, three of forgery and using forged documents, one of murder, one of attempted murder, two of house breaking, two of rape and the Jain defamation case. Regarding the last, the presiding Judge, addressing the counsel on both sides, said that it was strictly a religious case and ought to be kept out of a criminal court, and quoted the opinion of Sir Charles Turner from a Madras Law Report, thus:—"I am bound to concur in the regret expressed by the Magistrate that a difference in a matter of religious practice should have induced the complainant to appeal to the criminal court and compel the exercise of jurisdiction in a matter in which, however clearly the complainant might establish that an offence had been committed, the criminal court can give no effectual relief. It cannot pronounce an opinion on the doctrine which is disputed, nor can it compel the restoration to the complainant of his caste privileges." He reminded the parties they had already spent a large sum of money in the Police Court and would advise them not to throw more good money after bad, and he might have added lawyers. The criminal law was not intended for such cases as theirs. He expressed no opinion on the merits of the case, but advised them, as did the Magistrate in the Police Court, to settle their differences and avoid further cause of dissension. Mr. Woodroffe, on behalf of the prosecution, concurred in the observations of his Lordship, but said that his client having set the law in motion, he could not withdraw without an apology and withdrawal of the charges complained of. Here was a pretty corner for a complainant to find himself in! The Judge only repeated his opinion that the matter ought to be settled. He might just as well have counselled moderation to the rising winds or the raging billows. To shew how they had accepted the Judge's advice, subsequently both parties applied for a Special Jury. This application was refused, but even this rational order was weighed down by a rider leaving the parties the liberty to renew the application at a later stage, when the pleadings had been settled. Surely, this is provoking. Is there no law to summarily put an end to this sort of frivolous prose?

cution? The timidity of British judiciary is as remarkable as the superstitions of English Jurisprudence.

Yesterday, Mr. Justice Pigot passed the following sentences :—

Dumree, for attempt at rape, four years' rigorous imprisonment; Sheikh Rajab Ali, for theft, seven years' transportation; Mirza Golam Ali, for theft, eight years' transportation; Sheikh Nawab, for house-breaking and theft, six years' rigorous imprisonment; Bhagaloo, for theft, seven years' transportation; Methoo, for theft, eight years' transportation; Hossein Ali, for attempt at rape, four years' rigorous imprisonment; Sheikh Hossein, for theft, eight years' transportation; Abdus Sabhan, for housebreaking and theft, seven years' transportation; Abdul Rahman Khan, for theft, eight years' transportation; Sew Bux Misser, for theft, seven years' transportation; Rajcumar Bannia, for dishonestly using as genuine a forged document, five years' rigorous imprisonment; and Ram Chunder Mundle, for theft, seven years' rigorous imprisonment.

And this under the boasted Code of Perfection! This is Justice tempered by Christian mercy and the humanity of the Nineteenth Century!

MR. LEE is a splendid host, and he proved so at his Water-Party on Monday. We wish we could give as good an account of all his guests. Many of them sorely disappointed him. He fixed his number according to the capacity of his launch, so as to give the attendance all the agreeableness of sufficing society—society up to the hilt, if you will—without the disagreeableness of a crowd. And he rigidly maintained it, even at the risk of offence. We have heard of one instance at least of his refusing an application from fear of incommoding his guests. We wish this delicate consideration were more common among hosts. What a torture was it to Mr. Lee to find after all his guests in danger of shivering on board for want of sufficient animal heat and feeling a sense of desolation and solitude! Many who had accepted did not turn up. Heaps of commissariat were in consequence wasted, and but for the host's personal resources and the experienced help of men like Mr. Turnbull, the enjoyment might have been marred. He saw that every one was agreeably occupied. He was all attention not only to the chief guest, the Lieutenant-Governor elect, but to one and all. Unstinted in good cheer and word, he sent away every body highly satisfied with the journey.

Sir Charles Elliott and several of the party went down to see the Water Works at Pulta. These had of course undergone the usual "eye-wash," and the most loyal operators were in attendance for any emergency. Everything was found shipshape. Mr. Price, the officer in charge, and Mr. Kimber, the Engineer to the Corporation, took them round the tanks, answering questions and explaining the working. Some of the old Commissioners looked out for Mr. Dickson, the Assistant Engineer of the Works—one of the few practical engineers in the service of the Corporation conversant with Water-Works—but he was not to be found.

By its last resolution, the Senate of the Calcutta University allowed the proprietor of the Ripon College three months' time to put his house in order. Under the circumstances, the Governor-General in Council properly postponed his orders on the recommendation of the Syndicate for partial disaffiliation until he had had the last word from the Senate. In the meantime, Baboo Surendra Nath Banerjee introduced certain reforms in his College and offered to do more as the Syndicate might suggest. To-day the Senate met at request of the Syndicate to consider the Government letter and Baboo Surendrenath's guarantee, and with profuse expressions of admiration for its energy, zeal and promptitude in endeavouring to remove abuses in the Calcutta Colleges, referred the question of guarantee to the Syndicate for disposal. Unless the Syndicate drop the matter now, it must come back to the Senate for final orders of the Viceroy, though the Senate was unwilling to retain its veto on the action of the Syndicate.

Another important matter was disposed of at this sitting of the Senate. Mr. Justice Norris' long threatened proposals about the Tagore Law Lectureship were rejected. He wanted

"Each candidate shall forward with his application one hundred copies of a brief synopsis of his proposed lectures, and if he so pleases, the same number of copies of his introductory lecture.

The copies of the introductory lecture and the brief synopsis so sent shall be referred to a Committee of the Faculty of Law consisting of five members to be chosen by the Faculty, who shall consider the same and report thereon to the Faculty, who shall recommend a candidate to the Senate for election."

THE memorial meeting in honor of the retiring Lieutenant-Governor was representative and crowded. The Maharaja of Durbhanga, the premier nobleman of Bengal, presided. Proposed by Maharaja Jotindra Mohun Tagore, of Pathuriaghatta, and seconded by Sir Comer Petham, Chief Justice, the meeting first recorded "its appreciation of the eminent services which Sir Steuart Bayley has rendered to these Provinces during his long and distinguished career." It then, at the instance of Maharaja Narendra Krishna, of the Shovabazar Raj family, and Sir Alexander Wilson, late President of the Chamber of Commerce, Resolved a Farewell Address to be presented by a deputation from a Committee of gentlemen named. The Committee number over 150 persons, representing various interests and professions and all stations of life, and include the gentler sex. The address is well-conceived and neatly put, showing information and grasp, and stating the case with truth and moderation. It was suited to the occasion and the man.

The next Resolution was that "steps be taken to form a Committee to invite subscriptions and take such means as may be deemed fit for raising a permanent Memorial in honor of the retiring Lieutenant-Governor." It was moved by the Maharaja of Doomraon and seconded by Raja Doorga Churn Law. We need not enquire whether the Committee to invite subscriptions have been formed or not, or if formed by whom, but we find the subscriptions announced already amount to Rs. 34,000. The meeting, it seems, was unwilling to waste any money on evanescent entertainment, for the resolution provides for none. The only Committee formed at the meeting was the one of 150 from which a deputation was to present the Farewell Address, the last two persons named being members and Secretaries. Yet we find the two members and secretaries announcing large subscriptions on behalf of "The Memorial Committee." It were well they advertised their authority as well.

The Deputation waited on Sir Steuart Bayley yesterday, at Belvedere. It was headed by the Maharaja of Doomraon. At his request, Maharaja Jotindra Mohun Tagore read the address. It was in these terms :—

"To The Hon'ble SIR STEUART COLVIN BAYLEY, K.C.S.I., C.I.E. At the close of your long and distinguished service in India we desire to convey to you some expression of the respect and esteem felt for you in these Provinces in which you have so long laboured and of which you have been for the last three years the Governor.

It is impossible to exaggerate the magnitude and difficulty of the task which the administration of so large an area, filled with so enormous a population of various races and religions with diverse feelings and interests, imposes on the head of the Government—a task of daily increasing difficulty. To this great task you have sedulously devoted your great ability, energy and experience.

You have endeavoured to obtain the best results from the existing machinery of administration by close supervision and gradual improvement. It would be out of place to attempt in this Address a review of your Administration. But we may record our warm approval of your efforts to improve the working of the Civil Courts, to maintain peace and order, to develop a popular system of Education by the encouragement of private and indigenous institutions, to improve the Excise system, and to direct and assist the bodies to which the work of Local Self-Government has been entrusted.

Your well devised extension of the system of independent Benches of Magistrates, the improvement of the system of recruitment for the Statutory and Subordinate Executive Services, and your laudable efforts for affording facilities for the payment of Land Revenue and for diminishing the rigour of the Sunset law, have met with general appreciation.

Your signal services to Behar with which you have been so long and closely connected, and your unwearied and successful efforts to avert famine and to promote the mental and material improvement of that Province, will ever live in the grateful memory of its inhabitants.

Your unceasing efforts to settle disputes among noble families, the extensive tours which you have made, at no small personal inconvenience, each year to satisfy yourself as to the condition of the various districts, and the promptness of your measures of relief in times of scarcity are proofs of your care and love for the country and its people.

Your services have been long, able and varied in many departments, and we all desire to convey to you our cordial recognition of them.

While we sincerely regret your retirement from your high office and from Indian public life we feel sure that you will still have the interests of this country at heart and will forward them by all means in your power.

In conclusion we desire to assure you that you will carry away with you our best wishes for the future happiness and prosperity of yourself and your family."

We regret we were not present at the presentation of the address. We envy those who were privileged to hear the reply. There is nothing in it new to us or our readers. We ourselves anticipated it by our article, the reply expressing in unjournalistic diction the points we made. Sir Steuart Bayley is no orator. He was never known to open his lips during all the long years of his service in Behar. But Europeans are wonderfully improvable and, forced to the forefront on all occasions since his accession to the Government of Bengal, he surprised all who knew him by his capacity for speaking. His predecessor and Guru,

Sir Ashley Eden, miserably failed. He nervously dreaded any occasion for speaking and could not decently deliver a few sentences. Sir Stuart has proved one of the best speakers among all the Lieutenant-Governors. In answer to the address, he pronounced a superb harangue. He said:—

"Maharajahs and gentlemen,—Seldom have I had a more difficult task, or one which more completely overpowers me with a sense of my own helplessness than the endeavour, which your kindness imposes on me, of giving expression to my gratitude for the great, the magnificent honor you have done me in coming here this evening to offer me your farewell address. When I look around me, and see the various classes of whom your deputation is composed, representing diverse nationalities and various religions, heads of old historical houses, leaders of thought and opinion in various professions and walks of life, I might for a moment be tempted to give way to an undue feeling of elation, but the feeling is succeeded by one of a very different nature—how little I have really done to deserve such kindness, and how vast the reward in proportion to the services rendered. I can only say again that, considering my own shortcomings, considering, too, the frequent occasions on which my action has run counter to the views and interests of one or other of the classes and communities here represented, I am overwhelmed at the kindness which has induced many of you to come from long distances, and all of you to contribute your time, your trouble, and your money to unite in offering me this farewell honor. I cannot find words to say how deeply I feel your kindness, nor how sensible I am of the great honour done to me. It is not necessary that I should reply to the various points in your address, nor make my reply in detail an apologia pro vita mea; but on one or two of those points I have a few words to say. You are good enough to credit me with 'having endeavoured to obtain the best results for the existing machinery of administration by close supervision and gradual improvement.' That I have succeeded in this aim, I am far from supposing, but you are right in assuming that this has been my endeavour. (Applause.) In a speech which I had occasion to make at Patna more than three years ago, I indicated that the only policy I set before me was to go on steadily doing the day's work as it came, remedying defects where I could, looking for no striking results, and giving way to no far-reaching ambition, but reforming little by little to meet actual necessities in a practical way, and in order to do this, I claim that to make the best use of the existing machinery is the only sound and wise policy. (Applause.) It is a bad workman, we are told, who complains of his tools. But I would go much further and say that a man who does not recognise that in the existing machinery he has a superb instrument at his disposal, is very wanting in discernment. I cannot too warmly express my admiration for both the great branches of the service on whom the administration of this country devolves. Whether executive or judicial, whether covenanted or uncovenanted, whether Europeans or Natives of India, these officers with daily increasing difficulties of hostile criticism, of isolation, of undue preference, have done and are doing noble work; and for efficiency, honesty and impartiality, can challenge comparison with any similar body. But I should be wanting in gratitude if I ended here. For such success as I have achieved, I am indebted more than I can say to the ripe experience, the untiring industry and the wise counsels of my Secretaries. (Applause.) I am not ashamed of being told that I am dependent on my Secretaries. (Applause.) It is to advise and assist me that they are there, and to no one am I more indebted than to my old and dear friend Sir John W. Edgar, my Chief Secretary. (Loud applause.) I cannot say how much I owe to his advice, support and assistance; and parting with him is one of the bitterest elements in the cup of my separation from India. I am glad to think that he remains to give the same loyal assistance and support to my successor, for which I am so much indebted. To my 'existing machinery' then, I am glad to tender my sincere gratitude (applause), and if in endeavouring to obtain good results from them without startling changes, my administration has been colourless, I am not ashamed to take it as a compliment. (Applause.) I am much gratified at the reference your address makes to my service in Behar. I am profoundly touched at the number of my old friends who have come down from that province to bid me farewell. I cannot but take a very special interest in the Province in which most of my useful service, and many of my happiest days have been passed (applause), and where I have for years been on terms of the most intimate acquaintance with so many of the notables. You have alluded to the difficulty of governing an enormous population, of such various races, and religions, with diverse feelings and interests. I do not think you can exaggerate the difficulty, but I do not desire now to dwell upon it. I have, however, something to say from another point of view on the clash of conflicting interests and conflicting sentiments which this diversity of race and religion brings into prominence, so far as religion is concerned. You have many of you read what in a recent speech at Agra His Excellency the Viceroy said of the eager desire expressed by Her Majesty the Queen, that every effort should be made to put an end to the antagonism and hostility which have recently in many places culminated in serious affrays. I have endeavoured, whenever an opportunity has offered, to impress upon the leaders of both religions their responsibility for so exercising their undoubted influence over their less instructed brethren as to lead them to the way of peace. It has also been my special anxiety to contribute, so far as lay in my power, to the cooling down of any waves of race antagonism that might still linger as a residuum of the great disturbance of those waters that took place some years ago (Applause.) It is, therefore, a source of special gratification to me to find on this occasion the leaders of divergent religions and of both races brought into harmonious co-operation. It shows how willing, even for an object of no great significance, they are to combine in action, and thus to set an example which will, I trust, be universally followed. (Applause.) Before I sit down, I should like to acknowledge the great assistance I have received from my non-official friends, whether as individuals or in co-operation, in informing me as to public opinion and giving me their advice. No ruler can afford to disregard it, and to me it has been most useful. And now, gentlemen, the hardest part of my task remains. I have spent 35 years in India, and find it very hard to say farewell. I have everything to be grateful for, and no expression of my gratitude can be adequate for the very great compliment you are paying me in your presence here to-day. I am thankful that my connection with India will not be altogether severed (applause), for if she is a step-mother to me, at least she has been a very indulgent one, and though called the "land of regrets," she has never caused me such regret as I feel in leaving her. To you all, gentlemen, collectively and individually, I bid a most reluctant farewell. (Loud applause.)"

That is the finest reply of the kind we can call to mind. Without art, without effort, without intention, the plain Indian Civil Servant attains all the effect of the best literary ingenuity. The austere simplicity of the reply is grand. Independent of ornament or the graces of rhetoric as Sir Stuart's speeches are, it is nevertheless animated with the eloquence of truth and feeling. The personal strain is permeated by a tenderness that is simply touching. It is almost difficult for a sound heart to even read the speech in the closet with dry eyes. On the public side it is equally remarkable. In spite of the speaker's disavowal, it is necessarily an apologia pro vita sua, and the vindication of his administrative career is thorough. The humility which marks it, is characteristic. Accordingly, in submitting his own claims, our Governor does not forget the loyal assistance derived from others, notably his Secretaries, chief of whom is Sir John Edgar, who virtually shared the government with Sir Stuart. The permanent interest of this notable speech is in the political wisdom—the outcome of the lifelong experience of an able and thoughtful public servant—with which it is weighted. Rulers, whether in India or out of it, would do well to lay Sir Stuart's profound remarks to heart. In India, they are of inestimable value.

ON Thursday, there was a Garden Party at Belvedere. It was Sir Stuart Bayley's last public entertainment. It was the best attended party since Sir Richard Temple received the Prince of Wales in the same grounds. At the end, almost a mile of carriage procession as it were drove out of the Palace. From Lord Lansdowne downwards, all Calcutta was there to have, in the uncertainty of another opportunity, a parting shake of hands with the host. Sir Stuart Bayley always makes a good host for a ruler, receiving each guest as he drops in and bowing him out and shaking him off at the end. This time he stood on the steps with Sir Charles Elliot and introduced his guests, one by one, to his successor. This was a compliment much appreciated by both European and native. It speaks well for both the outgoing and the incoming ruler.

THE Calcutta Press was the victim of a hoax on the occasion. The morning papers had announced that the National Mahomedan Association would that afternoon present their farewell address to the Lieutenant-Governor, and they sent their reporters on this—December fool's errand. Everybody but, our precious morning press knew that the Mahomedan day is Monday—the Mahomedan Literary Society's address being fixed at noon, and the Mahomedan Nationalists' at 4 O'clock.

REIS & RAYYET.

THE INCOME TAX IN BENGAL IN 1889-90.

MR. K. G. Gupta's Income-tax report shows a considerable expansion of the revenue in last year. At one bound there was an increase of over two lacs and fifty-five thousand over the receipts of 1888-89. This must be exceedingly cheering to the Government, the Board of Revenue and the Department, but how differently must the result bear upon the people! At what cost of harassment and suffering to these is it dearly bought! Indeed, the whole of the report must read differently according to the point of view of the reader—having one meaning for rulers and a contrary one for the subject population. The marked increase in the revenue, while it brings joy to the Government, is fraught with sorrow to the governed. And similarly with other facts in Mr. Gupta's otherwise exceedingly interesting report. Great credit, for instance, is claimed for efficient administration that every pice of the total demand was collected in six districts. These districts and their fiscal officers are no doubt contemplated with the best feelings by the Revenue Board, but we really shudder to think of the state of things in the devoted tract where the tax-gatherer carried himself with such rigid severity. Of course, it may be pleaded on the otherside that the assessment in these districts was so fair and equitable that the collection was a task of little difficulty, and hence the realizations left no arrears. But we are precluded from accepting this pleasant view. One of the six districts referred to is Burdwan, and the spirit in which the assessment was carried on there may be conceived from one single fact. It is wellknown that, after years of expensive litigation and patient endurance of all sorts of worry and harassment in her contest with the Court of Wards, the Dowager Maharani of Burdwan was induced to purchase peace by compromising the adoption suit on receipt from the Court of 13 lacs of rupees. And will it be believed that this sum was considered by the then Collector of Burdwan, Mr. Maguire, as the Maharanee's income for the year, and a preposterous assessment of Rs. 33,854 was fixed upon it. Such a flagrant error could not indeed be allowed, and the assessment was cancelled, but it is significant of the tenor of mind they usually bring to the work of Incometax assessment.

The report expresses the Board's gratification at the gradual decline in the number of warrants issued for the realization of the tax. But this decline, any more than a decline in the number of objections, is no ground for the inference that there is any real improvement in the character of the assessment. There are less objections, because objections are not properly enquired into, and the necessity of coercive measures is diminished owing to the submissive character of the people who pay unjust demands from their experience of the hopelessness of escaping them. For the rest, a notice is as much an object of terror to the common and ignorant people as a warrant, and the Department, with its staff of vigorous Deputy Collectors, has succeeded in inspiring such a general awe among the people that the issue of notices is enough to ensure the collection.

The worst part of the matter is the assessment under the law of the struggling and really poor classes with incomes of Rs. 500 and upwards to 1,000. The report states that 69 per cent. of the entire number of assesseees belong to these classes, while the amount they pay is 21 per cent., or about one-fifth of the whole. In view of the undoubted hardship caused not only to these classes but, under color of the law, to those whose incomes are below the limit of Rs. 500, the Government might well sacrifice an inconsiderable portion of its revenue, and thereby afford relief to the most numerous portion of the assesseees. To ask the Government to do this, is certainly not asking them to do much. Their revenue under all the principal as well as minor heads is continually expanding, and if they chose, they might easily confer the much-needed boon upon large numbers of people who barely live from hand to mouth. A stronger reason why the limit of assessment should be raised, is the fact that this is the only practical and effective remedy for the oppression and rapacity now committed with impunity by the assessing agency amongst the humbler classes of the payees. Their assessments are exceedingly unjust. People with hardly any income may be shown to be on their books, and to be once there is to be there till Doom's Day. The higher appellate authorities interfere but little, for proof whereof one need not go farther than the Board's own report.

OFFICIAL OPINION ON LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT.

GREAT credit is due to Mr. Toynbee for his thorough grasp of the subject of Local Self-Government. His report on the District Boards, like his Municipal Administration report, takes precedence of the other Divisional reports. In the Government resolution, it is again singled out for especial commendation. And judging from some extracts which appear in the resolution, he should appear fully to deserve the marked distinction that Sir Steuart Bayley has paid him. The following passage will show with what close scrutiny he observes the proceedings of the Boards in his division, and how ready he is to encourage with greater powers those which are able to display good business capacity. Here is what the Commissioner of Burdwan writes :—

"On the whole, I am of opinion that both the District and Local Boards have done good work during the year. Now that complete sets of rules have been framed, and the routine work has begun to settle down into a groove, I think that the next step to be taken is to gradually withdraw the appointment of official Chairman. I would not at first allow the members of District Boards to elect their own Chairmen, but they might nominate them, and the District Magistrates in forwarding the nomination might report fully on the business and other qualifications of the nominees. The experiment might for the present be tried in Hooghly and Burdwan. If successful, it should be afterwards extended to other districts in this division. In making this recommendation, I do so on the assumption that the principles of local self-government have been finally accepted as the policy of the future, and that every possible step to that end is to be taken which is consistent with caution and a due regard for the interests of the general public."

The other Commissioners are more or less satisfied with the work done. Mr. Smith, Commissioner of the Presidency Division, observes that the Boards have on the whole worked smoothly and successfully, although he calls the attendance of the members at Jessore bad. The Commissioner of Rajshahye records similar satisfaction, only pointing out that, with the exception of Pubna, they depend a good deal upon the official Chairmen. From Dacca the report is sufficiently favourable. The Commissioner of Chittagong, while mentioning the Tipperah Board in especial for great interest evinced by the members, points out some blemishes in the conduct of this as well as of the other Boards. In Chittagong, the members made common cause with a clerk detected in malpractices in connection with contracts. The accounts are carelessly kept and members are sometimes slow in rendering accounts of money, however properly spent. The Patna report is satisfactory in all respects, except in regard to the Local Boards which, as a rule, are reported as unable to do justice to the matters made over to them and to the funds allotted, some of them leaving large sums unexpended under some heads, especially Sanitation. The Patna Sudder Local Board and the Durbhanga Local Board are, however, excepted from this censure. The Commissioner of Bhagulpore, while generally satisfied, complains of friction with the District Engineer, a tendency to leave too much business to standing Committees and a disposition to increase the expenditure on establishments. The Commissioner of Orissa says the administration has been generally satisfactory, although there is room for a great deal of improvement.

"The Lieutenant-Governor's opinion of the working of District Boards of Bengal was fully stated in last year's Resolution, and the events of the past year merely confirm the views then expressed. Their dilatoriness in dealing with accounts and bills is remarked on by several officers, and another blemish noticeable is the occasional tendency of certain Boards towards factious criticism of, and opposition to, professional authority. The Commissioner of Burdwan writes :—

"The Inspector of Local Works is always willing to help and advise the District Boards, and his action in this respect is, I think, appreciated by them all except Burdwan, which seems to resent all interference as an unnecessary and covert attack upon their independence." The Fureedpore District Board is said to have given way to a spirit of ungenerous criticism against the Engineer, an excellent officer, who ought to have been encouraged rather than thwarted. In the Puneah Board there was extreme friction at one time between the members and their District Engineer, and the interposition of Government was necessary before healthy relations could be restored. Such cases must be characterised as blots. If the members of a District Board cannot always agree with their responsible executive advisers, they should at least be willing to credit them with a single-minded desire to advance the condition of the district. But generally speaking Sir Steuart Bayley can say that the record of the year has been a very favourable one. Good work has again been done and all departments show a satisfactory expansion of administration."

We have been at pains to deal with the subject at such length in the hope that these local bodies will take timely warning from the criticisms passed by the officers of the administration. It will not do to confound wrong-headed resistance of official counsel with independence, and we hope future reports will show some further improvement in their conduct. The District Boards are to be congratulated on their expanding revenue from the Road-Cess, which, as revaluations of districts under the Agricultural Department proceed, will continually increase, so that, unlike municipalities crippled with stationary resources, they will be always in a position to do full justice to the varied responsibility which rests upon them. They must show more active interest in out-door inspection and not rely too much on the already over-worked Chairman. Our advice to them is, they should not neglect sanitation in a mistaken zeal for education. We cannot bring our remarks to a close without acknowledging the liberality and sound discretion which have prompted Mr. Toynbee in suggesting the trial of non-official Chairmen in selected Districts. The fulness of his reports might be more generally imitated in other Divisions.

DISTRICT BOARDS.

THE District Boards, under trained official Chairmen, are naturally somewhat more successful than Municipalities. Nevertheless, they are not free from faults, and if one cared to look at their work critically, the verdict can scarcely be favorable. The absence of harmony between the District Boards and their Engineers is described as a blot on their conduct. At Burdwan, the least interference of this officer is resented by the Board as an unnecessary and covert attack upon its independence. The Fureedpore Board is said to have given way to a spirit of ungenerous criticism against the Engineer, and at Puneah there was such extreme friction as to call for the intervention of the Government. Similar friction not unoften appears in the Calcutta Municipality, and there would seem to be some general cause at work at the bottom; probably both parties are to blame.

There seems also to be a tendency to leave the work too much to the executive, that is, the Chairman and Vice-Chairman, and the meetings of the Boards are growing fewer and fewer. Making allowances for the great distances from which members of District Boards have to attend at the head-quarters, we must still say that if local self-government is to succeed as a means of calling forth business habits in the people, the members should show more public spirit by their attendance. Very ingenious explanations are sometimes given for the small number of the meetings. In Hooghly, it is said that, on the introduction of local self-government, the members had to meet oftener to consider many important questions of principle and that matters having since settled into a groove, there were now, under something like a law of compensation, fewer meetings, and these were all that was necessary. In Mymensing, it is explained that "the attention of the Chairman and the other members was devoted more to the execution of the heavy amount of real work done during the year than to taking part in the discussions in the meetings." Neither of these specious explanations is acceptable to Sir Steuart Bayley, and he calls the attention of the Boards to Mr. Toynbee's warning which is conceived in great practical wisdom:—

"It is difficult to believe that all the business of the various departments now under the control of the District and Local Boards can be transacted in less than 12 meetings during the year. Much of the routine work is no doubt done by the Chairman and Vice-Chairman by the express or implied consent of the Boards; much, too, depends on the individuality of these two officers. But, all things considered, one meeting every month ought to be the minimum number consistently with an intelligent interest in their work on the part of the members. There is, I fear, considerable general truth in the remark made by the Chairman of the Raneeungee Local Board to the effect that, unless matters come before the Board in which the members are directly and personally interested, it is hopeless to expect them to attend regularly. A self-denying public spirit is one of the elements requisite to make local self-government a success in this country."

Nor have the Boards displayed any better administrative capacity in dealing with the Pounds than the Municipalities. The Government look to the receipts from this source as capable of considerable improvement, and regard the management of Pounds as a test of the efficiency of the executive administration.

In our notice of the report on Public Instruction, we have already shown how the Boards have been far from successful in the administration of the primary and middle schools. There is room for improvement in the management of ferries, which is only pronounced by the Government to have been on the whole, "not unsatisfactory." The expenditure incurred by the Boards on hospitals and dispensaries, however, is satisfactory, on a comparison with the previous year, although it is to be regretted they have not paid sufficient attention to sanitation. It appears that allotments of money for the supply of drinking water were sanctioned by several District Boards, but nothing was actually spent in the districts of Jessore, Burdwan, the 24-Pergunnahs and Khulna. The Magistrate of the 24-Pergunnahs offers the following general observations:—

"The question of water-supply is involved in difficulty. The want of good water is felt all over the country, and applications for the excavation or re-excavation of tanks are made to the District Board from time to time, but the Board find it difficult to comply with such applications. The selection of a few solitary villages for such improvement would appear invidious and might excite discontent in parts of the district which were not selected. Moreover, if a tank were cleared or re-excavated, it would seldom be possible to secure its preservation or to guard it effectively from all external impurities. A provision of Rs. 2,000 was made in the budget for the last three years, but the amount was not expended, as no scheme of water-supply could be devised which would admit of being carried out with such a small grant."

On the above remarks of Mr. Forbes, the Government observe as follows:—

"The explanation given in other districts is of a similar character. The total expenditure incurred under this head in the whole of Bengal was only Rs. 8,756 on account of sanitary arrangements at fairs, and in some places in the excavation of wells and tanks. The result is no doubt of a very unsatisfactory character; but as was pointed out in last year's Resolution, without the appointment of local agencies specially entrusted with matters relating to village sanitation and empowered to raise the necessary funds, very little improvement can be expected in this direction. A special report in which this question has been fully discussed has been submitted to the Government of India, and the whole question is now under the consideration of that Government."

The needful agency can only be supplied by the constitution of Union-Committees which Sir Steuart Bayley has always regarded as necessary to complete the Local Self-Government scheme.

The Boards have also spent considerable sums of money in famine relief and the construction of original public works, but the repairs of village roads have not been conducted on a uniform system. The construction of feeder railways and of tramways has received the attention of the Boards.

MOORSHEDABAD.

Moorshedabad, November 1890.

It is a pity that the difference between the rival sects of the Mahomedans, which originated on the occasion of the last Moharum, instead of being amicably settled, is going to become more and more wide, and if its progress is not checked who can say that it will not beget serious evils? The fanaticism of one party has advanced so far as to blunt the conscience to attempt the most brutal and inhuman crimes. It is not long ago that a distinguished ministerial resident officer of this city of high position received an anonymous letter bearing the Khagra Post office seal, in which he was threatened to communicate to a member of the Nizamut family the possible commission of dacoity and murder in the latter's house on an appointed day. This created great alarm both in the family and in the city, and steps were immediately taken to guard against such attempts. The letter was made over to the Police for enquiry and detection of the writer. It seems extremely desirable in the interest of public peace to post a strong body of mounted police in addition to what already exists.

The termination of the second period of local Self-Government has been published by beat of drums, and the nomination of the next candidates and the canvassing for votes are in full swing. The second general election took place on the 5th November 1887 and Babu Bangshidhar Roy, Deputy Collector, Nizamut Department, was elected chairman, but shortly after, owing to want of time on his part to discharge this honorary duty, he was compelled to resign, and, at a meeting of eleven Commissioners, Kumar Runjit Sing, of the Nashipur Raj, was elected in his place. The young gentleman is an undergraduate of the Calcutta University and has given satisfaction as Chairman. The income of the Municipality was greatly increased, though no oppressive tax was imposed, and the expenditure considerably reduced, thus bringing a handsome balance to meet emergencies. A bylaw for the removal of the thatched huts from the main road was framed and passed by Government. This was necessary as a safeguard against the annual conflagrations that devastated the city. He took steps to check taking illegal gratification by the officers of the municipality by prosecuting some of its principal servants. He rendered eminent services during the last two inundations which have received acknowledgments from Government. With ample leisure at his disposal he directed most of his time to the work of his honorary post. He brought energy and impartiality to the discharge of the duties.

The cold season has set in and public health is good.

TRAILOKYA NATH SANYAL.

REPORT OF THE INDIAN FACTORY COMMISSION.

We reproduce here some of the recommendations :—

Interval of rest for Children.—The present law, which places the limit of nine hours' work for children, requires an hour's interval for rest. Our unanimous and well-considered opinion is that, if children are worked as half-timers in the manner above recommended, no fixed interval of rest for them should be required by law. Our reasons for this opinion may be stated as follows :—

(1) To give an interval of rest to children while the machinery is moving, and while the other operatives are at work, would be so great an inconvenience to mill-owners, that they would certainly try to dispense with children, or the law would be evaded. We have already said that all efforts should be directed to finding employment for children and making it convenient for mills to employ them.

(2) Our inquiry has proved beyond all doubt that it is the practice for Indian operatives of all classes to go out of the factory at odd times for smoking, drinking water, and other purposes, and to stay away from 5 to 15 minutes. This casual taking of intervals of rest is facilitated in India by having more hands than are employed in Europe; and a reference to the answers furnished to question 29 will show that the nearest workman, or "Joriwalah" as he is called, is always ready to carry on the absentee's duties. Given these opportunities of relaxation, and given the nature of the work children are employed on in Indian factories, we think that an interval of rest within the six hours of work is unnecessary.

Objections raised to half-time work for children.—In the evidence taken before the Commission of 1884, many witnesses gave it as their opinion that if children were employed as half-timers, there would be some danger of the same child working in the forenoon in one factory and in the afternoon in another. In our opinion this danger has been exaggerated. If a half-time law for children was passed, and the guardian as well as the employer was made responsible for seeing that it was not broken, we are confident that for every hundred cases in which the law is now evaded, there would not be more than one case of a child found working in two factories on the same day. In this connection we should remember the opinion expressed by the Commission of 1884 :

"We may, however, conscientiously say that we fear many children are worked full-time." We also notice that much stress has been laid on the fact that there being no compulsory education in this country, children employed as half-timers would run wild and get into bad company. To this argument we reply that there is little doubt that when the scheme of half-time work is adopted, Local Governments will, with the help of mill-owners, devise some means for educating the children and keeping them under control in schools. Supposing that no steps were taken in this direction, which is most improbable, we would say, let the children do what millions of unemployed children do in this country, what the half-timers of Ahmedabad do apparently without any injury--amuse themselves as they please. We think that public opinion would be in favour of this alternative, and would be opposed to the employment of children of tender years, on any factitious grounds, in factories for 12 and 13 hours a day, as they are liable to be now. We would here like to say that if our recommendations are approved, the convenience of mill-owners in regard to the introduction of changes in the organization of their labour in factories must be consulted, and the law brought into force after sufficient time has been allowed for re-organization.

Holidays for adult male operatives.—To the second part of the 4th question—"And is any provision required prescribing an allowance of holidays for adult male operatives?"—we would answer that, subject to the exceptions recommended in para. 18 of our report, provision should be made in the Act for securing to male adult operatives the same holidays as have been recommended above for women and children. Our reasons for making this recommendation are :—

(1) that, if there is one point on which Indian operatives are practically unanimous, it is in demanding that this concession shall be granted to them;

(2) that it is a fact that a weekly holiday is now given in a large proportion of the factories in India, while the remaining factories give at least two holidays in the month;

(3) that the Factory Commission of 1875 made a modified recommendation to this effect, and two members of the Commission of 1884 wrote a separate note advocating the weekly holiday, and showing that if there was unanimity or nearly so on any one point in that enquiry, it was that one day's rest in seven should be allowed to all mill-hands, male and female;

(4) that the Committee of medical experts appointed by the Government of Bombay to enquire into the health and condition of the mill operatives in the City of Bombay, reported "that further, in the interest of the general health of the operatives, it should be compulsory to allow certain periods of rest in the day and a certain fixed number of holidays (say four) per month."

(5) In conclusion, we may say that the mill-owners of Bombay have offered through the Mill-owners' Association to accept the rule that there shall be a weekly holiday (vide copy of a letter given by Mr. Lokanday in the Appendix.)

The day of rest should be Sunday.—If one day of rest in seven is granted, the operatives in all the Provinces visited by us desire that it shall be one fixed day in the week, that all the factories shall be closed on the same day, and that the law shall fix Sunday as the day of rest. We observe that in the Bill before the Legislative Council, no mention is made of Sunday, and we suppose that a reference to a Sunday holiday was omitted in consideration of the fact that the intentions of the British Government might be mistaken in appointing the Christian Sabbath as the day of rest. After a careful enquiry on this point from all the operatives we have examined, we have come to the conclusion that they ask that Sunday should be the day fixed for the holiday, because it is the most convenient day for meeting their friends who are employed in other mercantile establishments and Government offices, where a Sunday holiday has always been the rule. As a fact, the holidays now given to them are given on Sundays. Speaking for ourselves as members of the principal religious communities of this country, we give it as our opinion that there is no possibility of the motives of the Government being misunderstood if it should choose to select Sunday as the lawful day of rest. There is no question here of preference on religious grounds. Ever since the British Government has been established in India, the people of this country have been accustomed to consider Sunday as the most convenient day of rest. No other day could now be selected which would not cause the greatest inconvenience to all concerned.

Indian festival holidays.—In regard to the Indian festivals, which are kept as holidays in factories, we recommend that the occupier of a factory should, if he desires it, be allowed by law to work his factory on the Sunday following a festival holiday. We do not think, however, that when two festival holidays are given in one week, the two following Sundays should be working days. There are, we believe, only two or three festivals in the year on which more than one day's holiday is given. In advocating, therefore, that the holidays in one week should only affect the Sunday following, we are not likely to cause any serious loss to the owners of factories.

Sunday a complete day of rest.—During our enquiries we have found that in a large number of factories, especially those connected with the cotton industry, it is usual to require the operatives to attend the mill on holidays for the purpose of cleaning the machinery. The mill-hands are ordinarily employed on these occasions from early morning until 10 or 11 A.M., and this without any remuneration. This the operatives consider a hardship. There is no doubt that, although the work is light, the mere fact of having to attend at the factory takes away from them the enjoyment of the day of rest, and prevents the operative from spending his holiday in taking change of air and visiting his friends and relatives. If it is granted that one day of rest in seven is necessary, it should, in our opinion, be a complete holiday. To make it a complete holiday, legislation is necessary, as proprietors are not likely to act on general recommendations on this subject.

It is not for us to suggest when the cleaning of machinery, which is now done on Sundays, should be undertaken; but we may mention that in those factories which now give a complete day of rest on Sundays, the machinery is stopped on Saturday afternoons for cleaning. In Bombay, where the mills will be chiefly affected by any legislation on the point, it is the practice to clean the machinery only twice a month. Supposing that it takes two or even three hours to clean machinery, the loss of time and work that would be entailed would be four to six hours in a month. It may be possible to make up this time during the month; but if it is not possible to do this, it does not seem to us a loss so serious as to prejudice the passing of a measure which is of such great importance to the comfort and well-being of the mill-hands. An exception will have to be made in regard to the employment of artificers, who are on Sundays engaged in overhauling the machinery and undertaking repairs.

A general working day for adult males not required.—In regard to the question—"Do the male operatives desire that a general working day shall be fixed by law?"—we would reply that, taking the evidence obtained by us as a whole, the operatives desire that the present working day,—daylight to dusk—should be continued. Some intelligent mill-hands have, no doubt, expressed a wish to have fixed hours; but others—and these are the poorer operatives—object very decidedly to any alteration in the present arrangement which is likely to reduce their wages.

General working day not demanded nor advisable.—To the enquiry—"If this change is not desired by the operatives themselves, do the conditions under which they work demand that it should be adopted?"—we give it as our opinion that there is nothing in the conditions under which Indian operatives work which calls for any legislative restrictions as to the hours an adult male may choose to work. Nor can we conceive any conditions which can ever call for State interference in this matter. The operatives of India are at present too ignorant to appreciate the full significance of this step which threatens to deprive them of what has always been considered the inalienable right of every man to do what he may please with his time, and which has hitherto left him to be the best judge of what is necessary for his health and requirements. If the Indian operative is too ignorant to appreciate the great issues involved in this question, his English fellow-workman is not. The mill-hands who work in similar textile manufactures in England have declared in a very emphatic manner that they will have no interference in the hours they choose to work, and rather than submit to any restrictions on this subject will sever their connection with the other labour unions which are now advocating the eight hours' movement. Taking all these reasons into consideration, the Government would not, in our opinion, be justified in legislating in this matter.

General suggestions made for the benefit of operatives.—It would be a matter for deep regret if, with such exceptional opportunities for learning the wishes and requirements of operatives, we concluded our labours without referring to those points which, although they cannot be considered subjects for legislation, are nevertheless of sufficient importance to the mill-hands, and therefore deserving the attention of Government and the sympathetic consideration of the employers of factory labour:

(1) Reference has been made in paragraph 24 of this report to the great inconvenience experienced by the operatives of Bombay in finding out the time at which they ought to start for their work. It is obviously impossible that the Bombay Municipality, in the interest of the public, can allow 50 or 60 factories to keep blowing their whistles at odd times between 4 and 6 A.M. On the other hand, to deprive the operatives of all chance of warning as to the time is a great hardship to 40 or 50,000 of the ratepayers of the Municipality. We would suggest that the Municipality should allow that kind of whistle which causes the least annoyance to be used once in the morning for each manufacturing centre in Bombay. The Mill-owners' Association might fix on the mill which would be the most convenient one for using this whistle for the whole neighbourhood. If a proper calendar showing the hours of daylight was used, and this warning whistle sounded half an hour or three-quarters of an hour, or even one hour, before the beginning of work, it would meet the necessities of the mill-hands and give them what they greatly want now—the exact time at which the mill will begin work. The Municipality might, with such an arrangement, allow even a second whistle to be sounded five minutes before the mills commence work, but this does not appear so essential as the first warning.

Holloway's Pills.—In the complaints peculiar to females these Pills are unrivalled. Their use by the fair sex has become so constant for the removal of their ailments that rare is the household that is without them. Amongst all classes, from the domestic servant to the peeress, universal favour is accorded to these renovating Pills; their invigorating and purifying properties render them safe and invaluable in all cases; they may be taken by females of all ages for any disorganization or irregularity of the system, speedily removing the cause and restoring the sufferer to robust health. As a family medicine they are unapproachable for subduing the maladies of young and old.

(2) In their petition to Government, the mill-hands of Bombay have asked that they should be paid their monthly wages on the 15th of the month following that for which it is due. In our opinion, this is a moderate and just request. It still allows the employers to keep 15 days' pay in hand, while it saves the operative the ruinous interest he now has to pay to the money-lenders and grain merchants. While the mill-owners save 5 or 6 per cent. per annum on this money, the operatives lose from 15 to 100 per cent. on the wages they have actually earned. It only requires the mill-owners to observe the general rule on the subject to have this grievance removed.

(3) In the petition above referred to the mill-hands ask that operatives injured, either temporarily or permanently, by the machinery should be provided for. In regard to this subject we find that in most of the large factories it is the practice to allow the injured man either the whole or half his pay during the time he is under treatment. In some factories the philanthropic owners have started a provident fund into which they credit all fines realized from the workmen and all salaries unpaid from any cause. From this fund operatives disabled by injury or disease are supported in comfortable circumstances. We commend this subject to the favourable consideration of employers.

(4) If our suggestion that children should be employed as half-timers is adopted, it will be found most important to provide some means of instruction during two or three of the spare hours that the children are off work. It is not for us to discuss here the advantages of elementary education, and general control and supervision of the rising generation of operatives. These are too obvious to require any advocacy from us: what we would say is, that Local Governments and Municipalities should meet mill-owners half-way and do, as is done in regard to children under other circumstances—contribute half the cost of teaching factory children. Supposing, for instance, that a mill employing 100 children spends R. 16 a month for two teachers, the Municipality or Government should double this subscription and provide two more teachers. Looking at it from a pecuniary point of view, the expenditure is so trifling that we cannot doubt that schools would be started without delay in connection with all mills employing a large number of children. It was not to be expected that a school started under the present circumstances could be a success. For it is impossible that a tired and jaded child can work his brain to any useful purpose after his body has been thoroughly worn out with physical exertion.

(5) The operatives are unanimous in thinking that something ought to be done to provide them with medical advice and medicines at the factory. When a man is employed from dawn till dusk, he has no time to go to the charitable dispensary for medical aid. This is a matter of considerable importance in a tropical country, where people of all classes are liable to suffer from what at first are slight ailments due to climatic causes, but which, if they are not brought under early treatment and cured, pass on to fatal forms of disease. Happily, we find in most of the mills about Calcutta and in some in Bombay, Ahmedabad, and Cawnpore, that mill-owners have already provided for medical advice and treatment for their operatives. We desire to bring this object to the consideration of those employers of factory labour who have not yet adopted a dispensary system. The cost is trifling, whereas the benefit to the health of the operatives, and therefore to their power of work, is very great. In this connection we ought to mention that we have been supplied by Dr. B. S. Shroff with a pamphlet advocating a scheme for the provident and medical relief of mill-hands in Bombay. We commend this subject to the notice of mill-owners and to those interested in the welfare of the operatives.

In conclusion, we hope we may be allowed to say that we have been profoundly impressed with the vast and far-reaching benefits which the people of India are deriving from the development and prosperity of the great industries which we have seen on our tour through the country. It would, in our judgment, be a great calamity if by any injudicious recommendations or unnecessary restrictions the prosperity of those industries was endangered.

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

A SONG OF AUTUMN.

ALL through the golden weather
Until the autumn fell,
Our lives went by together
So wildly and so well.

But autumn's wind uncloses
The heart of all your flowers ;
I think as with the roses,
So hath it been with ours.

Like some divided river
Your ways and mine will be,
To drift apart for ever,
For ever till the sea.

And yet for one word spoken,
One whisper of regret,
The dream had not then broken,
And love were with us yet.

RENNELL RODD.

WHAT HE SAID.

OH, yes, I'll tell you the story—
The very words that were said,
You see the supper was cooking,
And I was slicing some bread,
And Richard came into the pantry ;
His face was exceedingly red.

He opened his half-shut fingers,
And gave me the glimpse of a ring ;
And then—oh, yes, I remember,
The kettle began to sing,
And Fanny came in with her baby—
The cunningest bit of a thing.

And the biscuits were out in a minute—
Well, what came next ? Let me see—
Oh ! Fanny was there with the baby,
And we all sat down to tea,
And grandma looked over her glasses
So queer at Richard and me.

But it wasn't till after milking
That he said what he had to say,
How was it ? Oh, Fanny had taken
The baby and gone away—
The funniest rogue of a fellow—
He had a new tooth that day.

We were standing under the plum tree,
And Richard said something low,
But I was tired and flustered,
And trembled, I almost know ;
For old Red is the hardest of milkers,
And Brindle's so horribly slow.

And that—let me see—where was I ?
Oh, the stars grew thick overhead,
And we two stood under the plum tree,
Till the chickens flew up to bed.
Well, he loved me, and we're to be married
And that is—about what he said.

A CONJUGAL PASSAGE—AT ARMS.

A CERTAIN man, to dissipate
The heat and other cares,
Essayed to draw some cider kept
Beneath his cellar stairs.

Before he started down his wife
To him a pitcher handed ;
But tripping up he tumbled down,
And at the bottom landed.

"My dear, the pitcher did you break ?"
Came downstairs sharp and shrill ;
Then crushing down his wrath, he cried—
"No—it, but I will."

Then pitcher which, indeed, escaped
Uninjured by the fall,
He hurled with all his strength and smashed
Against the cellar wall.

NEWS AND OUR COMMENTS.

ON a recent occasion, Cardinal Manning gave expression to the following sentiment :—

"Men become what their rulers make them. Penal Codes make loyal men disloyal. The greater the power, the greater should be the humanity and the tolerance shown to those whom ages had brought low."

A noble truth nobly expressed, to be taken all the same cum grano salis.

THE Fabian Society is agitating for a legislative curtailment of the enormous interest oftentimes charged by the Marwaris. We are afraid it will take more than Fabian time to bring the idea within the four corners of an Act.

ence to the climate of Bombay. Let our Anglo-Indian friends look out for more friends and connections than ever to be billeted on them.

SIR Edwin Arnold, from his retreat in Japan, has sent forth "The Light of the World," which will be published simultaneously in London and New York in January.

MR. H. Holmwood has been confirmed as Inspector-General of Registration.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN left a will by which he bequeathed £1,000 to each of the cities of Boston and Philadelphia, for the benefit of young married artificers, to be advanced to them in 5 per cent loans. The interest was to accumulate for 100 years, when £100,000 out of the fund was to be applied for municipal improvements. The completion of the century finds the Boston fund at 400,000 dols. and that of the Philadelphia at 150,000 dols. only. The heirs have now applied for the breaking of the will and division of the money. There are some fifty of these vultures.

THERE are only three forms of carriages with three kinds of fare on the Oudh and Rohilkund Railway—the Upper, Intermediate and Lower. It too long resisted the progress on the other Railways, and one by one it is adopting the conveniences offered elsewhere. For one thing, from the first January next, it introduces a second class for passengers.

THE proprietor and editor of Tut-t-Hind, Meerut, is in trouble. He was prosecuted for defaming Karam Elahi and Abdul Gunni, merchants, in the Punch, a supplement of the said journal. The Joint-Magistrate found him guilty and sentenced him to six months' simple imprisonment and Rs. 500 fine. The Judge has admitted an appeal and bailed out the editor.

THE two Italians sent out by the Secretary of State to develop the wine industry in Cashmere, have arrived. One will superintend the cultivating operations and the other the manufacture of wine.

THE new American tariff has proved disastrous to the mother-of-pearl industry of Austria. Nearly 6,000 persons in Vienna and its suburbs engaged in the production of small mother-of-pearl buttons are out of employment.

IN Bombay, one Ballia Bhulia threw out of a window twenty feet high his infant son, as he conceived that the child was in conspiracy with a mill manager to ruin him. The child fractured its skull and was removed to hospital.

AT the Worcestershire Assizes, Symmonds, a youth of twenty, pleaded guilty to committing a felonious assault upon a girl of his age, and was sentenced by Mr. Justice Cane to six years' penal servitude. Symmonds had no idea of the gravity of the offence when he admitted it or of the punishment involved, and he spoke accordingly to the Visiting Justices at the goal. They took pity on him and communicated with the Judge, who once more allowed him to plead to the charge. This time, Symmonds pleaded not guilty, the jury too found him not guilty, and the Judge acquitted him. In India, persons are not unoften punished on confession extorted, and instances are not wanting when men have been hanged whom the High Court found not guilty of murder.

ACT IX of 1860—to make provision for the speedy determination of certain disputes between workmen engaged in railway and other public works and their employers—has been extended to the district of Manbhoom in the Chota Nagpur Division.

THE Siberian Railway, which has been sanctioned, will be 1,967½ miles long. The cost, including rolling stock, has been estimated at £9,000 per mile, or a total of £18,300,000.

The form of schedule provides for

IN Rome it is the correct thing to comport like the natives. Such is the European teaching. Our Indian Prince in Europe, (assuming the correctness of the following account in the English papers) has only proved his docility and paid the sincerest homage to those among whom he is sojourning:—

"Mrs. Elizabeth Williams, or Ross, of Stamford Street, London, is taking proceedings at Edinburgh against His Highness Sir Bhagvat Singhji, the Thakore Sahib of Gondol, at present residing in Belgrave Crescent, Edinburgh, for payment of £50 per annum as alimony for her child, and £2,000 as damages for alleged seduction. In 1887, the pursuer was housemaid at a house in Chester Square, London, which was rented by the Thakore. He left for India in August, 1887. Shortly afterwards she married George Ross, to whom she had been engaged for several months. In February, 1888, she gave birth to a male child. The Thakore, who is at present studying medicine in Edinburgh University, denies her charges. He says, he is an Indian by birth, and his domicile and home are in India; the pursuer is English by birth, and has no right or title to bring such an action. Lord Stormonth Darling sent the case to the Roll for discussion of the questions of law."

His Highness received great kudos for patriotism in leaving his country for his country's good. And no doubt it was a humane, if somewhat quixotic, idea for a ruler in these days to go and reside abroad to study medicine for the ultimate benefit of his people. He has now made the crowning sacrifice—of character—in his zeal for knowledge and desire for practical familiarity with gynecology and obstetrics.

As for the litigious defence set up by him, that must be the prompting of some impudent pettifogger among the natives. We do not suppose he carries in his travelling establishment a Katiawar mooktear.

We write the word "natives" in that connection advisedly. It is something to be in the same boat with the supercilious Saxon—even as a stowaway. It is a great temptation to the "——natives" to make the most of the opportunity to call the British by the same despised name, with or without the—dash. Now that we have experimentally shown that the Europeans may be and indeed are, natives, we hope our friends like J. Ghosal and other Esquires will consent to be natives, and our brothers like the Indian Mirror will be spared the everlasting torture of correcting the English language and altering "native" and "natives" wherever they occur to "Indian" and "Indians" and noting the change in every instance.

IN common with our morning contemporaries, we committed, last week, the mistake of announcing the rejection by the Senate of Mr. Justice Norris' proposals about the selection of Tagore Law Professor. The new rules were passed, and the initial selection is vested in five of the Law Faculty, the candidates furnishing a synopsis of their proposed lectures. The new rules are:—

1. In the month of May in each year, the Faculty of Law shall select not more than three subjects, upon one of which the Professor for the following year shall be required to deliver a course of at least twelve lectures.
2. Immediately after the subject or subjects shall have been thus selected, advertisements shall be published in such newspapers as the Syndicate may think proper, stating the subject or subjects so selected, and inviting applications from candidates for the Professorship.
3. Candidates shall send in their applications to the Registrar on or before the 1st May following, and each candidate shall forward with his application one hundred copies of a brief synopsis of his proposed lectures, and if he so pleases, the same number of copies of his introductory lecture.

4. The copies of the introductory lecture and the brief synopsis so sent shall be referred to a Committee of the Faculty of Law consisting of five members to be chosen by the Faculty, who shall consider the same and report thereon to the Faculty, who shall recommend a candidate to the Senate for election.

5. The election of the Professor shall take place in the month of August.

6. The Professor shall commence to deliver his lectures in the month of November next following his election, and shall complete the delivery thereof in the following January. His salary shall be paid in twelve equal monthly instalments: the first instalment to be paid on the first day of the month following that in which the first lecture is delivered.

7. The Professor shall send to the Registrar a complete manuscript copy of his lectures within five months from the commencement of the delivery thereof.

Why not fix a fee for candidature? It does not matter, if the Act of Incorporation allows it or not. The hundred copies of a brief synopsis involve an outlay, and the Tagore business is a distinct business though managed by the University.

How the Salt Law is all grasping and how cruelly it is worked, will appear from the two following judgments of the Bombay High Court (Birdwood and Parsons, J. J.):—

"Mr. Justice Birdwood, in delivering the judgment of the Court in the case of Deoki, woman, said:—The Magistrate does not find that the salt was originally contraband. On the contrary, he distinctly says that there is no proof that the accused separated from earth the three tolas of salt found in her house, and there is nothing to show that her own story is not true. She says that her child poured some water into the pot in which she kept her salt, thus melting it, and that, not wishing to lose the salt, she put the brine on the fire, and evaporated the water, thus producing dry salt. The heating of the brine was certainly 'process' by which the salt was 'separated from brine,' and fell, therefore, within the definition of 'manufacture' contained in Section 3 (g) of the Bombay Salt Act, 1890. But in the circumstances of the case, a fine of Rs. 10, with 8 days' rigorous imprisonment, in default of payment, was excessive and wholly disproportioned to the character of the offence. (See also our judgment in Criminal Reference No. 132 of 1890 of this day's date). We reduce the fine to one anna, and award one hour's imprisonment in default of payment of the fine. Any sum levied from the accused in excess of eight annas to be refunded."

"Mr. Justice Birdwood, in delivering the judgment of the Court in the case of Malamma, woman, said:—The accused bought some dirty salt in the bazar, and in order to clear it, dissolved it in water, which she boiled after removing all particles of dirt from it. She thus obtained some clear dry salt. The process by which the salt was separated from the brine falls within the definition of 'manufacture' contained in Section 3 (g) of the Bombay Salt Act, 1890, and as the accused had obtained no license to manufacture salt under Section 11, her act is punishable under Section 47. But, in the circumstances of the case, the fine of Rs. 15, with ten days' imprisonment in default, appears to us to be excessive and wholly disproportioned to the character of the offence, especially as the Act has only come into force recently, and contains a new definition of the word 'manufacture,' which will apparently convert into crimes some perfectly innocent practices connected with the use of salt for domestic purposes. We reduce the fine to eight annas, and award one day's simple imprisonment in default of payment of the fine. Any sum levied from the accused in excess of eight annas to be refunded."

A BABOO Pandit is welcome in the Indian Mirror to announce—

"I purpose to prove, on the authority of the Vedas, that our Aryan forefathers knew the arts of telegraph and electricity. It will not be out of place here to state that fans or balloons for aerial navigation were not unknown to our Aryan Rishis in the Vedic age, the full particulars of which I intend to write in another letter."

Meanwhile, to prove his point as to telegraphy, he, with the help of our contemporary's Devils, offers some gibberish by way of a mantra of the Rig Veda. Of this unutterable arrangement of Roman typography, our modern Sankar—such is the name of Baboo Pandit—supplies a translation out of all proportion to the quantity of the so-called mantram quoted. Pandit Tarka Churamani had better take care of his laurels. Here at last, in the same field with him, is an ex post facto discoverer bolder than he.

Holloway's Ointment and Pills are beyond all doubt the most valuable and most convenient medicines that travellers can take across the seas to distant climes, for change of climate and the new conditions and surroundings of life to which they will be exposed will assuredly give rise to great disturbances of the system and to such especial morbid states of the blood and constitution generally as will render the use of these effectual remedies highly necessary, for they will find in them a ready and safe means of relief in most of the diseases which afflict the human race, and with them at hand they may be said to have a physician always at their call.

NOTES, LEADERETTES, AND OUR OWN NEWS.

THE Irish squabble is developing into a Donnybrook Fair business. If tar and feathers have not yet been brought into requisition, eyes are being stopped with lime paste. Mr. Parnell still fights for the leadership of his party, but he is distinctly losing his head. Perhaps he understands his people, and is constrained to reduce himself to their level. On his way from Dublin to Cork, on the 12th, he harangued at the railway stations. It was not the march of a conquering hero. At Mallow station, a hostile crowd attacked his carriage with sticks. A grand reception, however, awaited him at Cork. The same welcome he found at Kilkenny. There was besides a torch-light procession in his honor. Notwithstanding these evidences of popularity, Mr. Parnell is ill at ease. Addressing an elective meeting in the Kilkenny district, he gave vent to his spleen by calling the seceders the gutter sparrows and miserable scum whom he had rescued from obscurity. This enraged the anti-Parnellites the more. Several uproarious meetings were held at Tipperary and Newry and a resolution passed condemning Mr. Parnell. Mr. Michael Davitt and Dr. Tanner surprised Mr. Parnell at a meeting at Rathdownly. They held a rival meeting. Mr. Parnell was uncomfortable and left and was hooted. They kept him pursuing. Whenever he went, they were there to oppose him. There was a regular fight at Ballynakil and Castlecomer. Mr. Davitt on his side led the attacks. He was badly bruised at the latter place. Mr. Parnell suffered too. Mud mixed with lime was thrown into his eyes and he returned to Kilkenny suffering intense pain, where he kept bed for a day or two and then addressed a meeting with his eyes bandaged. His popularity is on the wane. The freedom of the city of Edinburgh presented him on a former occasion has been annulled.

NOTWITHSTANDING the shortness of notice, the rush at the Levée on Tuesday night was great. From 9-30 to 11, there was a continuous stream of men to bow to the representative of Her Majesty.

The engineering for the drawing of the affluent by the public entrée, through the great House up and down, into the Throne Room, past the Presence, and conveying it out, till it is discharged on the great flight of stairs in front, has of late years much improved. There was a departure this time in the compulsory detention on the stairs which had a distinctly, if mildly, penal aspect. It is not the same as enforced stay in a furnished and brilliantly lighted up room. Every care should be taken to prevent dead-lock. The ceremony is simple, and yet it is a trial to both sides, specially to the Personage who, standing up from the Viceregal Throne, receives the homage of privileged subjects to the Sovereign. As every one is interested in going through his duty as quickly as possible, and as no one is detained in the Presence Chamber, there is no reason why a continuous flow cannot be maintained. It is no doubt difficult to manage a great mob of gentlemen, combining the restlessness and hurry of the European with the sluggishness of the Asiatic, but knowledge and skill move vast armies in the field, and the men on board a man of war do not knock against and cripple one another. As yet, we are at the beginning of conscious Imperial Rule. With the completion of the railways and other communications, and the development of education and commerce, the Levée of England's Viceroy in the East will be more and more crowded. At present, it is rather of a private party confined, for the most part, to the personal entourage. It is a meeting of Europeans mostly. The numbers this year were as follows: Private Entrée, 31 natives and 82 Europeans; Public Entrée, 379 natives and 884 Europeans; New Presentations 49 natives and 159 Europeans, or a total of 459 natives and 1125 Europeans.

It will be different when it becomes a national affair. Then the European element will dwindle to numerical insignificance. Indeed, when the people come to know their lord, then even the great Palace, built by the large soul of Wellesley against the peddling views of his masters of the East India Company, who condemned it as a grotesque extravagance, will not suffice for the Viceroy, unless at least a vast separate place is raised for the reception of his Durbaris.

Being a native paper, we are not privileged to pry into or speak of the Drawing Room. That is a matter specially reserved for the European press—even as news.

THE Hon'ble Sir Charles Alfred Elliott, K.C.S.I., assumed the Lieutenant-Governor of the Bengal Division of the Presidency of Fort William, on Wednesday, the 17th December 1890, under the usual salute. The Bengal Secretariat was closed on the occasion. The Gazette Extraordinary announcing the assumption, therefore, we believe, is dated the next day.

His first appointments are :—

Mr. Percy Comyn Lyon to be Private Secretary to the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal.

Captain John William Currie to be an Aid-de-Camp on the personal staff of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal.

Captain Alfred Granville Burne Turner to be an Extra Aide-de-Camp on the personal staff of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal.

SIR Steuart Bayley, having made over charge to Sir Charles Elliott, left Calcutta the same evening for England via Bombay, by the ordinary mail train. A large number of officials and non-officials—European and Native—headed by Sir Charles Elliott, crowded the Howrah railway station to bid him good bye.

MR. A. Mackenzie, C.S.I., took charge of the office of the Chief Commissioner of Burma from Sir C. H. T. Crosthwaite, on the forenoon of the 10th instant. Sir Charles Haukes Tadd Crosthwaite, K.C.S.I., in his turn, being appointed an Ordinary Member of the Council of the Governor-General of India, in place of Sir Charles Elliott, took upon himself the execution of his office, on the 18th instant, under the usual salute.

MR. John Nugent, of the Bombay Civil Service, has been appointed an Additional Member of the Governor-General's Council for making Laws and Regulations. The services of Mr. R. J. Crosthwaite, C.S.I., Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces, and Additional Member of the Governor-General's Council, have been placed at the disposal of the Foreign Department.

THE Lushai Revival is over, and the Lesser Supplement of our Little War may be said to be at an end. The original war was provoked by the incursions of the Lushais into the Chingri Valley. Of the offending tribes, Raja Lienpunga was understood to be the most formidable leader, and the chastisement of that Chief and others and the security of the frontier in future were the principal objects of the British expedition that last year penetrated the dense jungle in that quarter. A simultaneous movement was made from two sides. While General Tregear led his force up north from the Chittagong Hills, Mr. Daly with his Assam Police went up the Dallessari river from Cachar. The cautious and adequate arrangements and management of Government crushed the spirit of savage mischievousness in the bud, inasmuch that our warriors found no enemy to fight. The Assam party, which had anticipated the grander military expedition, was particularly lucky in easily obtaining the submission of several of the lesser chiefs and recovering most of the captives. But the great Lienpunga made his escape by running far away. Thus the war was over and the columns and most of the men returned. Unluckily, our Government had established two fortified outposts in the heart of the Hills, and left the seeds of future complications in the insufficient garrisons left therein. It was not in human nature, far less in savage nature, to resist the temptation. So poor Captain Browne was amused with trumpety appearances of peace and security, while the clans—Lienpunga returned to animate them—made a swoop upon both isolated garrisons at once on the 9th September last, the political being the first victim. Hence the necessity of another military entry into Lushailand and another beating of the bush. Accordingly, preparations have been making towards the march of regular troops about the end of this month. Meanwhile, the business has been quietly forestalled and cheaply finished, let us hope, between the pluck of Mr. Cole and the diplomacy of Mr. McCabe, Captain Browne's successor in political charge, who were ordered by the Assam Government to try their hands at it. Lieutenant Cole went from Fort Ajjal, with 100 of the Cachar Military Police, accompanied by a military surgeon, straight for Lienpunga's present settlement. This was reached and occupied the same evening without resistance, notwithstanding the strong stockades built for the purpose along the march. Thence decoy hillmen were sent out to wheedle or bully Lienpunga and others in. For, it was feared that a severe military demonstration might fill the Chiefs with despair, driving them to the refuge of the far off backwoods, only to return after the pursuer was withdrawn. The "detectives" not returning, Lieutenant Cole, after a full day and night's stay, marched forward. Ultimatums had been sent not only to Lienpunga but to lesser chiefs like Raja Thompony (a brother of Raja Sukpila) and Thanruma. Meanwhile, the whole neighbourhood was stirred, thickets searched, and arms and ammunition discovered, and the effect of this occupation and activity was that one fine evening Lienpunga and all his ministers came in like good boys, and were all secured. This was on the 9th instant. Next morning, the column marched back, receiving on the way Thompony's surrender, and reaching Fort Ajjal by evening. Thanruma is understood to have gone far away into the heart of the Burma forests.

The captured chiefs will shortly be put on their trial.

THE last municipal loan of ten lacs was highly successful. The original holders of the expiring loan had agreed to transfer about 1½ lacs to this loan at Rs. 4 premium. The balance was taken up at 5-14 and 6.

THE only important matter discussed at the last (Thursday) meeting of the Commissioners, was the application of the gentleman holding the position of Assessor to the Corporation to open a market. Mr. Lee, with the instinct of a Government servant and in the interest of good government, was strongly opposed to superior officers of the Corporation entering into trade. The Commissioners found that the matter had too far advanced to refuse the license. Sanctions had already been given for building the market and the applicant encouraged to lay out a large sum. Under the circumstances, it were, speaking moderately, unfair to refuse the final permission. And yet what reasonable man will deny the justice of the contention raised by the new Chairman and supported by his great predecessor? We hope the present case will not be allowed to form a precedent, without at least a specific and thorough discussion. Baboo Norender Nath Sen gave a very good reason for withdrawing his opposition to the granting of the license when he said that practically the applicant is not joining his post of Assessor to the Corporation. This was known to many of the native Commissioners and, doubtless, accounts for the extraordinarily one-sided character of the voting. But it was worth telling in the public interest. This information relieved some consciences and still farther swelled the votes for the permission.

THE Jain defamation trial commenced on Thursday. Mr. Justice Pigot refused the application for a special jury. There are 12 accused. But it was decided to try them separately, at least to try one first. The offence being compoundable, the result of one trial would shew the course to be followed in the remaining eleven. Baboo Chutturput Singh, being the chief, was elected by the prosecution, and is now being tried. He has escaped exhibition in the "zoo" apparatus which is a terror to so many honest souls and weak brethren, being allowed to sit by his counsel. The two leading legal families, the Woodroffes and the Evanses, counsel the prosecution, while Mr. Phillips alone is the defender of the Faith—in Baboo Chutturput.

If Baboo Chutturput is denied the assistance of counsel of his comrades, there is a saving of cost.

SRIMAN SWAMI is dead!—Long live Sriman Swami! This rare bird of a Brahman, who purposes to invade England to wean John Bull from his national Roast Beef, has, after an ornithologic predecessor of antiquity, risen from his ashes. He has simply cheated us out of our true opinion. The Allahabad Native weekly, the Indian Union, contradicts the report of his death. Like a much greater one, Sriman has lived to read the obituary notices on himself. Our contemporary writes :—

"We are very glad to be able to contradict the report about the worthy Sriman Swami's death at Pushkur. He had been very seriously ill, but is now much better, and we hope he will soon get well. We wish him a long life."

We don't. Long or short, we hope the new lease will be worthy of his powers and his sacrifices.

THE Nizam as the Fountain of Honour has made a unique creation. There never was at any time, in India or in Persia, or anywhere else, a Zoroastrian mansabdar. Notwithstanding the liberality of our Government of late years, there is no Parsee Nawab in British India, though there are Khan Bahadars. In Native India, His Highness of Hyderabad has just made one—Nawab Framroz Jung.

More fortunate in exile than in the home of their origin, if the Parsees were happy in the hospitable protection of the Hindus, they are happiest under the free sway of the British. These have shown every readiness to encourage and honour the Parsees. The Honours Chapter of the history of British India proves the British partiality towards the Parsees. It was on them that our present rulers tried their prentice hand as elevators and ennoblers. Long before the Mutinies, while the empire was still held by the East India Company, the experiment was made of grafting an English title of honour on an Indian name. A Parsee architect of his fortune, Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy was knighted. The choice was so good and the trial so successful that Government were farther encouraged and a step taken in the direction of founding a hereditary nobility. The same unexceptionable Guebre was then created a baronet, and legislative help was given him to entail property for the maintenance of the title. This was long, long ago. Since then the country passed into the hands of the Crown, and from time to time decisive measures have been taken, such as the institution of new Orders, to impress the people with the monarchical and imperial idea by showering titles and distinctions, and twice every year are some such announced. Still Bombay and Parsees maintain their pre-eminence. Titles are, no doubt, plentiful as blackberries, but these are all, either Oriental titles or newly instituted Orders, more or less exalted. Creations of any old English Order are rare birds, and they are all confined to Bombay and the Parsees. We have no British Peers among our countrymen. The utmost stretch of nobility allowed us is Baronetcy, and it is remarkable that all the two Baronets of India are citizens of the city of Bombay and that they belong to the sect of Fireworshippers.

But the Parsees have had no Nawabs, any more than Rajas. It was reserved for the liberal Mussulman Ruler of the Deccan to give them one of the former. The Zoroastrian community throughout the world should be grateful to His Highness for this recognition of their race. The incident is not a little significant. The whirligig of Time brings on its own revenges and compensations. Driven from home by Islam, the Parsee at the end of centuries finds to-day in Mussulman India not only a protector and a cherisher, but also a Fountain of Honour.

THE first recipient of the Montyon Virtue Prizes of the French Academy, this year, is Abbé Beraud, of Blanzay, Saône-et-Loire. His portion is 2,500*fr.* He founded two orphanages, and rescued victims in a pit explosion. 84 years old, he is strong enough to walk 30 miles a day, is a capital swimmer and is the bricklayer and carpenter of his orphanages.

THERE was an organization at Warsaw to starve children to death. It did its dismal work for a time undetected. No less than 200 infants were thus despatched. Lately, Madame Skibitska, her married daughter, Madame Wanowska, the latter's sister-in-law, and another woman with a coffin-maker and a grave-digger were tried for these murders. To ward off suspicion, a number of children were packed in one coffin and buried as one adult. The chief culprit has been sentenced to three years' imprisonment and her accomplices to smaller terms. There pends an appeal by Government, the sentences being considered inadequate. But what a commentary is here on the Draconian British Indian Code and our sanguinary magistracy and insatiate administration! We forbear to point out the bearing of this revelation on the question of comparative morality or on the offence of the speakers and writers who are always exalting their people at the expense of our own.

FROM the sublime to the ridiculous, the Honourable Dr. Mahendra Lal Sircar leaves the Bengal Legislative Chamber, and Baboo Raj Kumar Sarvadhikari takes his place—thanks to a Ma Bap and Gharib Parwar Government!

WE are glad that the Nawab Bahadar of Moorshedabad has been brought down to Calcutta for treatment. Here he will at least be less in danger from quacks and mountebanks. He can speak, but is unable to move himself. This power will come by and by, we are sure.

NAWAB Abdool Luteef Bahadar is ailing. No sooner he returned from his grand tour, than he caught fever, and is confined to his room.

It is a great pity that just at this nick of time two of the chiefs of the Congress should be laid up. Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee, soon after his return from Europe, felt seedy and, in a few days, fell into a rheumatic fever of a rather obstinate kind, which still confines him. It is an unfortunate accident to his numerous clientele, and it may prove an embarrassment to the management of the Congress. On public no less than on private grounds, we pray that he may soon recover. Baboo Surendranath Banerjee too has been for some time suffering from bronchitis and fever. He is in a fair way of recovery, but it is feared he will not be able to take any part in the Congress. Nothing can be more disappointing to him, or to the thousands who would gladly listen to the stream of eloquence from his lips.

THE Thompson Memorial Committee had a balance of about Rs. 9,000 in their hands, which was to be appropriated to the purposes to be named by Sir Rivers. So they wrote to him, long since. A month before he died, he informed the Committee that he would let them know his mind shortly. He, however, did not live to communicate his intentions. The Committee, believing that Lady Thompson must be aware of them, or at any rate would be best able to expend the sum according to his wishes, have remitted it to her with liberty to expend it in any way she pleases. With this ultimate liberality, the corporate swan of the Committee, we take it—its occupation gone—expires.

A TERRIBLE disaster is reported from Bombay. A large house, some 55 feet long by 20 deep, consisting of a ground floor and four upper stories, let out into 22 tenements and occupied by about a hundred persons, collapsed suddenly, burying the inmates. Thirty dead bodies were recovered and twenty-seven persons rescued sent to hospital. Five hundred labourers were at work, removing the debris. Whole families are found to have been killed, in some cases only one or two members escaping. The house was a total wreck. It was built only three and half years ago. An examination shewed that there was hardly a sound piece of timber in it. The public indignation is great against the municipality for not strictly controlling the construction of buildings. Lord Harris had been to the hospital to visit the injured.

THE Elphinstonians of Bombay have paid a deserving tribute to the retiring Principal Wordsworth, B. A., C. I. E. There was a special convocation of the local University for conferring on him the honorary Degree of LL. D. The Governor presided as Chancellor, Mr. Justice Birdwood as Vice-Chancellor presented the Professor to the Chancellor. The degree conferred, the undergraduates who had mustered strong, occupying the galleries on either side of the Chancellor's seat, threw handfuls of rose leaves on their object of veneration and lustily cheered him. Both the Vice-Chancellor and Chancellor spoke of the intellectual and social merits of the Doctor. The close of these proceedings was followed by a torch light procession of graduates and undergraduates to the Professor's residence.

CARDINAL Manning has fulminated his bull against child marriage in India. He denies that it is a religious tradition or in any way sanctioned by the Hindoo religion. At best "it is only a social tradition—contrary to the law of nature, which is universal and supreme." Indian widowhood too comes under his ban. "That," cries the Cardinal, "too is contrary to the law of nature which gives to every woman in widowhood the liberty to marry again. Such a privation of natural liberty is contrary to all justice and to our whole Imperial law." The Cardinal contents himself by denouncing the institutions and recommending their abolition by legislative enactments, under the right by which, Sir Bartle Frere says, the British hold India—"the Divine right of good government" and in vindication of the law of nature and human liberty.

ANARCHY IN INDORE.

AFFAIRS for some time seem to be drifting from bad to worse in Indore. The administration is represented to be as rotten as possible. Ministers have been changed, one after another, without any improvement. The highest reputations have been wrecked at the Holkar's court. Now that a new Premier has been appointed, we should, under ordinary circumstances, pause to give him a trial. But the experiment has been often tried, to no purpose. In fact, this frequency of change, not only in the head Executive but in all departments and offices, is abnormal. It is not simply a bad sign, but a formidable disease in itself. We have no hope that Mr. Bedarkar will prove any better than his predecessors, great or small. The public, and doubtless the Government of India, want some visible guarantees other than names and change of officers. Any one of the many ministers, of greater or less pretensions, that Maharaja Shivaji Rao has, within the few years of his reign, employed, ought to have given a better administration than Indore has ever had since the death of Maharaja Tukaji Rao. Any one would assuredly have given a better administration, if left to himself. But the simple truth is, no one has been permitted: every one has been checked and countervailed, harassed and bullied in the straight path of duty according to his lights, until the disgusted and humiliated Dewan has taken shelter in the shell of inaction, intent only on preserving the remaining shreds of personal respect till he could best make his escape from the bondage of a responsibility which he has not the power to discharge. The interference of the Chief paralyses the civil service from Minister downwards, and threatens to bring the machinery of state to a deadlock. But for the British Government, the collapse would by this have come—or some other alarming dénouement.

It may be deemed unfair to indulge in this strain of generality without descending to illustrative facts. But the usual rule may be dispensed with in a matter of public notoriety. The court can almost take notice of it without formal proof. The papers of Bombay and of Central India have, for a long time, overflowed with accounts of Holkari Freaks, Horrors at Indore, and so forth. Complaints too have gone up to the Supreme Government, and the records of the Central India Agency are understood to be full of the grievances of injured servants and of a suffering people. The activity of the champions of the Maharaja in the press is itself an indication that the air is thick with outcries against the Raj. In fact, much indignation has been caused by the inexplicable certificate which His Highness has obtained from the Political Agent in the last Administration Report. To take a typical case of Holkari administration, the well-known trial of Martand Shankar Kapse. It is openly alleged that the confession was extorted. That is not a very great reproach to a native state, perhaps, seeing how rife extortion by the Police is in British India. But here among us at least the judiciary is pure. Not so in Native India. In Indore at any rate, the highest dignitaries of the bench do not escape suspicion. In this case, the defendant has been sentenced to four years' imprisonment and to a fine of Rs. 12,500. That pecuniary mulct—twelve thousand and five hundred rupees—may well in a native state give a handle to suspicion. Such vindictive judicial taxation has not been unknown in British territory—it has been laid in advanced Bengal itself, even in the High Court—but it clearly belongs to barbaric criminal administration. It is given out, however, that, as a reward for his bravery in the sentence, the Chief Justice received a bonus of 200 gold mohurs. Here is an original hint to rulers in the art of raising the wind!

But if the Chief Justice has been rewarded, what of Judge Gutkar who, at the sessions trial, did not please the majesty of Indore? On abject submission, he has been let off with a transfer to another district. Let us give the other particulars in the words of a well informed correspondent of the Mhow paper, the Eastern Herald:—

"Another official concerned in this case, has fled to the Deccan for fear of being tortured. Daji Malhar Kale has been beaten severely and is now in prison. His very life is in jeopardy. But something more extraordinary yet remains to be narrated. The late Dewan was called upon to award punishment to the accused, but his tender heart throbbed within him and he refused to give effect to the arbitrary desires of his master; whereupon he (His Highness' tutor at one time) received abusive epithets and quietly went home. The former Naib-Dewan, the late Shamrao, gave the ex-Dewan a hint that on the next day he would some way or other be disgraced. Believing this to be perfectly possible, from the antecedents of his master and pupil, the late Dewan sent the members of his family away first and himself fled from Indore precipitately with post haste, so much so that for fear of being recalled, he forgot his turban in the train and at Callian he felt so much terrified and confused that he was actually taken out from the compartment. What a sad sequel to Dewan Raghunathrao's escape! When the news of Kirtane's departure was made known to His Highness, he sent for Shamrao and in a tone of infuriated rage, for which he is remarkable and which since his installation he shows at its brutal height, spoke to him 'You Devil, it was you who gave hint to that old drone (Dewan) to quit Indore, is it not? Your fate is in my hands. What I wanted to do in respect of him, will be done in his stead to you!' Shamrao felt the force of the words of the Oracle of Hawa Bangla and received severe and cruel beating, so much so, that his head had swollen from its effects and feeling sickly from the effects of the chastisement, he went home and with a view to avoid the next day's disgrace which was to await him he secretly (like Bhau Sahib Kibay) took the cup of poison and thus saved himself from the dire ignominy which was in store for him. When the news was communicated to the Indian Nero, he issued orders for paying Rs. 7,000 to the deceased's relatives for the performance of his obsequies. So much for his generosity in being the cause of taking the poor man's life and gagging the mouths of his surviving relatives.

After saying so much for the Kapse tragedy, I come to something else. All Vakils have been enjoined not to take up cases in which the Maharaja is a party and the brother of one Shiva Prasad (a Vakil who had taken the brief for Kapse, the accused, and was junior to Mr. P. M. Mehta, Barrister, in the case) has been dismissed from the military department where he was A. D. C. to the Commanding Officer. The relatives of Kapse have been seized and thrown in prison on some pretext or other. Two other persons named Kelker and Bhanu are imprisoned also.

I have done with one case. I have only given a few persons' names as I do not know those of others. I now turn your reader's attention to another case known as Manktaram wherein the prisoner has been lashed, and dragged from one place to another and placed in a wooden cage, in such a cruel way that he could not move an inch side-wise, and starved. Four other persons, viz., Chundilal, Baldeo, Birdichand and Magniram, are undergoing a like illegal and inhuman confinement."

COMMERCE AND CUSTOMS.

THE last Customs report shows steady progress as compared with the last year. The trade of this Province, taking exports and imports together, increased by nearly a crore of rupees or from 78 crores to 79 crores. The net customs duty collected in the year is also of a reassuring character. Since the year 1882-83, when the import duties were almost wholly sacrificed, there have been great fluctuations in the revenue, but the increase in 1888-89 was maintained in the year under review. This has been secured by the imposition of the duty on mineral oil, the importation of which in continually expanding volume, is a most interesting phenomenon. The petroleum duty has alone recouped the whole of the loss caused by the remission of the import duties and the reduction of salt duty, and thus proved the wisdom of the Government in the selection of this article as suitable for taxation.

Although, however, there was an increase in the value of the trade on the whole, there was a fall in the value of imports to the extent of nearly one crore, principally in piece-goods imported from the United Kingdom. This falling-off naturally led to a decline in the trade of the Suez Canal. There was also a decline in the import of other merchandise, namely, machinery, silk, umbrellas, horses, liquors, drugs, fruits and unrefined sugar. On the other hand, there was an advance in the import of metals, oils, refined sugar, spices, railway materials, woollen manufactures and matches. As the largest decrease occurred in the import of cotton manufactures, the largest increase was in that of oils. The importations of mineral oil in the year were the highest yet reached. The whole of this increase is due to larger receipts from the United States, the imports from the United Kingdom as well as from Russia having both fallen off. Russian competition with American oil, while it is so successful in Europe, is not so in Calcutta. In the Home markets, Russian oil is steadily making its way, so much so as to compel the Americans to introduce cheaper means of transport by tank waggons and tank steamers, but there has been no attempt as yet made to send the oil here either from America or Russia. Further, a prejudice against Russian oil was created by the first consignments, and a prejudice, as rightly observed by the Customs Collector, Mr. Scobell Armstrong, takes long to remove. There is a tendency to cheap nastiness in regard to some of the articles of import, about which the following remarks of the Collector will be read with interest :—

"Brandy has declined by 13½ per cent., which, considering the nature of much of the liquor imported under this name, is not surprising. A considerable portion of it has very little resemblance to brandy, except perhaps in colour. It is the commonest German spirit got up to look like brandy and comes chiefly from Hamburg and Antwerp, and the average declared value is from Rs. 2.8 to Rs. 3 per imperial gallon. The best brandies come in bottle through the United Kingdom.

"Gin has again declined, and the taste for it seems to be steadily falling off.

"The imports of whisky show a very slight advance in quantity with a considerable decline in value, and there was no accumulation of stocks in bond. The quantity of the established marks and brands continues the same, for it would not pay to tamper with them, and so risk the loss of the trade; but with the commonest sorts of whisky, as of brandy, the tendency in quality is downwards. A quantity of it is inferior German spirit made from anything but malt, I believe principally rice, and coloured and flavoured to represent whisky. Nearly the whole of the whisky imported come from or through the United Kingdom, but there have been some importations of high class whisky from Australia.

"Rum, which was formerly an item of importance, has fallen away to insignificant figures, being only 910 gallons in the past year, against 9,047 gallons in 1888-89. China formerly sent the largest quantity of this spirit to Calcutta, but last year none at all was received from that country. The cheap common spirit from Germany has apparently killed this trade."

It is the keenness of competition which leads to these cheaper manufactures. As in some kinds of liquor, so in lucifer matches, the English match is being superseded by the manufactures of Sweden and Norway. The development of the import of this article, however, is as remarkable as that of mineral oil, and the Collector has thought fit to notice it separately. From a statement given by him, it appears that the value of the import of matches has increased in the last five years from 4 to 7 lacs. The bulk of the importations is manufactured in Sweden and Norway and are sold wholesale at about Rs. 35 per case of 50 gross, the retail price being two boxes for one pice. The more substantial

English manufacture of Bryant and May cannot compete at this extremely low price, and is steadily being displaced in the Calcutta market.

In regard to salt, the selfish action of the English Syndicate has recoiled upon themselves. There is a heavy falling off in Liverpool salt with a corresponding increase from Arabia, Aden and Germany. These are now powerful competitors, and if their cheaper manufacture may not oust Liverpool permanently from the market, they will always be a check upon the operations of the English salt-suppliers. Their method is thus described by Mr. Scobell Armstrong :—

"The plan adopted is to crush good clean kurkutch, i. e., sun-evaporated salt, by sufficiently simple machinery, and send it into the market, as a very similar and almost, if not quite, as good looking a salt, to compete with Liverpool. One machine for this with two pans was by permission set up in the Sulkea Golahs and worked last year with such success that leave has been asked for the setting up of three more, one of them with four pans. This salt after crushing has been sold here at Rs. 80 per 100 maunds with a very handsome profit. It is not, I should say, absolutely as white and nice to look at as the English salt, though very nearly so, and it has the disadvantage from the nature of its grain of giving less bulk for the same weight, which is against it with the retail shopkeeper who sells mostly by the hand-ful, a disadvantage which may be partially but not entirely obviated by a change in the method of crushing. If, however, Liverpool salt were to continue to range as it has done from Rs. 90 to over Rs. 100 per 100 maunds, I have little doubt that the advantage in price would much more than counterbalance these objections, and that this slightly, if at all, inferior and much cheaper salt, would end by pushing Liverpool salt out of the market, for crushed salt could be sold at a profit for a much lower price than Rs. 80 per 100 maunds."

In woollen goods, there is some increase, but there are decreases in the finer kinds of woollen piece-goods, such as broad-cloth, alpaca, flannel and tweed, probably due to very large importations of shawls, which are in a great measure put to similar uses.

The report is replete with interest. Mr. Scobell Armstrong discusses the future of the salt trade with great ability, and though he does not take a desponding view of Liverpool salt, he gives the English Syndicate a warning which they cannot neglect.

THE GOVERNMENT AND THE NAGS.

In view of the increased mortality in 1889 from snake-bite, the Secretary of State has directed the annual reports on the subject, which had been discontinued in favor of triennial reports, to be resumed. The Government of India have just issued a resolution in which the subject is discussed with great care. It would seem that the discontinuance of the old practice of annual reports has had an unfortunate effect. The mortality caused by venomous animals has been great. There has been a great increase in the number of deaths, both of human beings and cattle, while the number of wild beasts destroyed has also been less than the normal rate. Taking the statistics from 1879 to 1889, the yearly average number of human beings killed by wild animals is found to be 2,720, and the rewards given during the above period for the destruction of tigers, leopards, bears, wolves and hyenas amounted to upwards of 14 lacs and a half. In spite of this large destruction of the more dangerous animals, the mortality in 1889 showed no abatement, being 2,724 of human beings and above 52 thousand cattle. This mortality, large as it appears by itself, is, however, small in comparison with the population, being no more than one person out of every 72,882 of the population.

The mortality from snake-bite is far greater. The average annual mortality during the last eleven years is 20,000, and the recorded statistics show a tendency to increase. The Government have always been alive to the subject, and various plans for reducing the mortality have had trial, with, however, no satisfactory result. The sum spent in rewards during the above period is Rs. 2,37,000, but the Government record with regret that in some parts of the country the grant of rewards for dead snakes has only resulted in people taking to the practice of breeding them. In view of the meagreness of the benefit hitherto derived from the system of rewards, the Governor-General in Council is not disposed to retain it on its present general footing. His Excellency thinks that the money now so spent might be more advantageously employed in the reduction of mortality from diseases like fever, which are no whit less destructive than snake-bite. Measures towards this object will naturally take the shape of sanitary improvements of the surroundings of habitations, and these measures, while they will improve the healthiness of villages, will also destroy the breeding grounds of the reptile. This is an original view of the question, and it will be understood more clearly from the following extract from the Resolution :—

"Moreover, so long as the people persist in walking in the dark with bare feet near their houses, where the same undergrowth, debris, and filth, which are the hot-beds of disease, provide cover in which venomous snakes can live and breed, deaths from snake-bite must continue to be numerous, for it is in such places that snakes are most dangerous, and not in the jungles where, though they exist in immense numbers, they can keep out of the way of human beings. The Governor-General in Council is of opinion that the most effective way of reducing mortality from snake-bite is to destroy the cover afforded for snakes in or near villages, and it is the wish of His Excellency in Council that the utmost pressure that can be legitimately placed on Municipal Committees and Heads of villages should be brought to bear to induce them to clear such places, and to keep them clear."

While the Government of India would discontinue or at any rate curtail the system of rewards for the destruction of snakes, they would on the other hand extend the system in regard to the more dangerous animals. Their views on this point are set forth in the resolution as follows :—

"The Government of India have, in consultation with Local Governments and Administrations, recently had under examination the question whether it might not be possible to organize some better means for the destruction of wild animals and snakes, and have considered whether the establishment of a Government organization for the purpose of destroying wild beasts would be likely to be advantageous. An experiment of this kind was attempted in Madras some years ago, but it was found to involve great expenditure, and the results achieved would certainly not justify the plan being tried elsewhere. Moreover, the larger carnivora are not gregarious, nor are they very numerous, and the adoption of any such system would inevitably end in causing the existing agency for destroying them to disappear. The Governor-General in Council has for these reasons determined to maintain the system now generally in force of granting rewards for the destruction of wild animals. His Excellency in Council, however, desires that particular attention should be paid to the following points, viz :—

- (1) all possible facilities, consistent with due precautions against fraud, should be afforded to those who kill wild animals for obtaining the authorized rewards ;
- (2) shooting parties, which engage to submit to the required precautions against injury to the forests, should be encouraged for the destruction of tigers and other dangerous carnivora in reserved forests ; and
- (3) licenses under the Arms Act should be granted freely to agriculturists located in the neighbourhood of forests and jungles for the protection of themselves and their cattle against wild beasts.

His Excellency in Council also thinks that more liberality might be shown in the offer of rewards for the slaughter of man-eating tigers. The destruction of one tiger which has taken to man-eating is of much more importance than that of a number of ordinary tigers, and the difficulty and expense involved in killing such animals are ordinarily very great. Native shikaris are often, owing to the inferior quality of their weapons, unable to hunt such animals, which again can often only be dislodged from the positions they take up by beaters who require to be liberally paid. It appears to the Governor-General in Council that the offer of rewards sufficiently liberal to cover their expenses would often induce military officers and others who have leisure at certain times of the year to organize parties with the object of disposing of advertised man-eaters, provided that they were assured of assistance from the local authorities, and His Excellency in Council would therefore advocate the offer in the case of man-eaters of large rewards together with the proffer of assistance in the way of elephants and other arrangements on the part of the district and forest officials. It appears to the Government of India that if prompt action were taken by measures such as these to secure the destruction of man-eating tigers before they have had time to do much damage, the mortality from wild animals, more than one-third of which is caused by tigers, might be reduced in some sensible degree. These observations apply also to the somewhat rare cases in which leopards take to man-eating. Wolves at times become very destructive in particular localities, and in such cases it would be profitable to entertain native hunters on liberal terms for the express purpose of exterminating packs that have made themselves dangerous. Under the present system of granting rewards the Government of India have reason to apprehend that rewards are not unfrequently given, especially in the case of cubs, for jackals which are represented to be wolves."

MAHOMET ON THE STAGE.

MR. HALL CAINE CRITICISED.

I have perused and reperused with singular interest everything that has appeared in connection with this subject, and I have particularly watched the unconscious impulse, the freedom of talk, the quick resentful hastiness with which Mr. Caine deals his blows and emphasises them without reflecting that in a controversy of this type one truth cannot be defended without injuring another. A religious belief that exists in potential strength among a large section of mankind, cannot be identified with the usefulness of dramatic art, however attractive it may be to the fashionable taste of fashionable men. While the former invokes in a thousand languages man's deepest convictions, his surest hopes, the most sacred yearnings of his heart, that which can find generations of men in brotherhood, comfort the fatherless and the widow, uphold the martyr at the stake and the hero in his long battle, the latter has a secret grudge against morality, makes the prudery of virtue the great hinderance to the attainment of the ideal, corrupts and spoils itself by an overmastering passion for show and in all the homeliness of honesty, the primness of purity, veils the secret fire of religion and lets morality often expire unawares. Thus Mahomet on the Stage cannot be justified as the "idea of the poet" "plus the material, recognizable, knowable, more or less honorable personality of Mr. A. B., or Mr. B. C., who walks the streets and eats bread-and-butter." In history, biography or painting, the individual is not carried away beyond the ken of his imagination, like Linnæus at the sight of the golden field of genista : the tribute of thought is limited to restricted phenomena and the sensibility is less heightened. In the stage, the actor, far from following the accepted model, gives away to such words, gaits, and gesticulations as impress the audience immediately not mediately. They either add to or subtract from the quality of the hero. The history of dramatic literature will abundantly prove this, and if Mr. Caine still wants to claim for the dramatic art, "an equality with its sister arts in range and choice of subject," he himself shows a "shallow and senseless prejudice" (to use his now words) in maintaining an opinion that grows in the air. Mahomet on the stage cannot but be a mockery, strongly irritating the religious feeling of the Moslems, just as "a mockery of Jesus," as the Times letter says, "on the stage at Teheran or Constantinople will excite pious indignation in Christian countries." The play may be decent or it may concern the most serious matter in the world, admitting that it is an English play in an English soil, but the excitement that it creates, the enthusiasm that it makes in an English audience, are paid for in the morbidity and anguish that fill the hearts of 50 millions of Her Majesty's Mahomedan subjects in India. Apart from other grounds, this is the prime consideration which should govern the case, and, if he is can did, convince Mr. Caine himself of the absolute necessity of the prohibition of the play of Mahomet on the stage in England. There is more harm in widening the breach than any particular good in satisfying a tiny knot of English friends. A Tübingen professor reviewing the progress of knowledge in the various branches, expressed a fear that, with the increasing specialization and multifarious subdivision of men's studies, the temple of science, like the Tower of Babel, would never be completed, because of the inability of the workmen to understand one another's language. This was an ill grounded apprehension. Nor is it less so in the case of Mr. Caine who, primed with the pride of the author clenches, his play as a valuable heritage, so that to disturb him in the enjoyment were cruel. If he chose some other intellectual equivalent, there would be no stultification of sentiment or of reason. The public will hardly recognise in his play the note of advance, and the explanation of the enthusiasm with which it is regarded in England, when the author in his defence, in the Overland Mail of 10th October, draws a parallel between Mahomet and Jesus and shows that "the spectacle of Jesus made to walk the stage of the peasants at Oberammergau has not only not excited the pious indignation of Christian countries but has done something towards deepening the religious sentiment of Europe. And yet the attitude of Christians towards Jesus is entirely above that of the Moslems towards Mahomet." True, but Christ and the Christians do not bear the same significations as Mahomet and the Christians. The extinction of race feeling is a harder problem than any that Mr. Caine has had yet to solve. He must have solid sense to understand that, before he airs himself in his own platitudes. He is apparently a reader of history, and history repeats itself with absolute truth. It is useless to spend further arguments for the prohibition of the play which, as it is, hurts the religious interest of the Mussulmans.

J.

Our contributor is undoubtedly a writer of power and information with a faculty for sententious terseness. All the more pity that he does not more exhaust his topic. He scarcely cares to make his aphoristic deliverances thoroughly comprehended of the poor "general reader." He is a frequent and useful contributor to the local press. He would be more valuable if he wrote less, but more fully. He will forgive us, we hope, if we also expect him to show more of the candour he himself enjoins on Mr. Hall Caine. Thus, he is content to dismiss one of that gentleman's clear argumentative illustrations with the rather mysterious truism that Christ and the Christians do not bear the same significance as Mahomet and the Christians. A true remark as well as an appropriate argument, but it wants beating out and down—to the comprehension of the legion that run and read or read and run. A Carlyle or an Emerson may pass—not without difficulty and many rebuffs and disappointments at the outset—as an author. But newspapers will look askance at, and pass over, such an exponent of thought—until he has won a commanding name.—Ed. R. & R.

RESOLUTION.

The 12th December, 1890.

Read—

Despatch from the Secretary of State for India, No. 190 (Financial), dated 28th August, 1890.

RESOLUTION.—In this Despatch the Secretary of State deals with the recommendations made in the report of the Select Committee of the House of Commons on East India (Civil Servants). His Excellency the Governor-General in Council directs the publication of the decisions arrived at on such of the questions raised as can be disposed of without further reference.

2. In regard to the rate of exchange for payment of pensions, the Secretary of State has decided that all pensions granted in rupees, which are payable at the Home Treasury to residents in the United Kingdom, or which are payable to residents in any other country in which the standard of currency is gold, shall be paid, with effect from the 1st of April, 1890, at the rate of exchange annually fixed for the adjustment of transactions between the British and Indian Governments, subject to the condition that the rate of one shilling and nine pence the rupee is fixed as the minimum rate at which the conversion into sterling shall be effected.

3. In regard to the recommendation of the Committee that some period of furlough should in all cases count as service for pension, the Secretary of State has proposed, and the Government of India has agreed, that one year's leave with allowances in 15 years' service and two years in 25 years' service shall be allowed to count as service for pension, provided that such leave is taken out of India.

4. The recommendation of the Committee that service should qualify for pension from the age of 20, instead of 22, has been accepted.

5. A list of amendments to the Civil Service Regulations is appended to this Resolution, showing the additions and corrections made in accordance with the foregoing decisions.

6. A further Resolution will issue subsequently dealing with the remaining questions regarding the leave and pension rules when they are finally decided.

SIR CHARLES ELLIOTT'S REPLY TO HIS TOAST AT THE SERVICE DINNER TO SIR STEUART BAYLEY PROPOSED BY SIR STEUART BAYLEY.

Sir Charles Elliott rose to acknowledge this toast. He said that he could not claim an acquaintance with his illustrious colleague of so long a date as that which the Chairman could boast. His personal knowledge of Sir Steuart Bayley dated no further back than the year 1877, when the latter was Secretary to the Government of India in the Famine Department, while he was Famine Commissioner for the then province of Mysore. In the course of arranging his papers lately, prior to leaving Simla, he had stumbled on a portly bundle of letters which Sir Steuart had addressed to him while acting in that capacity. He was filled with admiration at the pains which the guest of the evening had taken to explain difficulties, to indicate the policy to be adopted, to guide by wise counsels. Some years later, he had again come in official contact with Sir Steuart Bayley, when succeeding him in the Chief Commissioner-ship of Assam. Once more he recognized the same measure of ready help, the same loyal support in assuring a continuity of policy. Now, for the third time he had to acknowledge on the part of his predecessor in office an earnest desire to lighten the administrative burden by a painstaking exposition of difficulties and experiences. When he (the speaker) very unexpectedly received Lord Lansdowne's commands to undertake the high functions on which he was about to enter he was filled with perplexity. The Lieutenant-Governorship of Bengal was said, and probably with some truth, to be second only to the Czarism of Russia in the demands it made on the governing power of him who was called on to fill it. As all lovers of Dante would do, he turned to that glorious poet for inspiration. Opening the third canto of the Inferno, he came on the well known line:

All hope ye leave behind who enter here.

This was sufficiently discouraging, though Bengal was not precisely an Inferno. But a few lines further on came the poet's appeal to Virgil for aid. The true import of Virgil's reply had escaped the critics. Instead of brooding over the awful inscription that frowned on them from the gates of hell, he showed how the powers of evil might be disarmed.

Here thou must all distrust behind thee leave,

Here be all fear extinguished.

That was the key to the difficult problem—perfect trust in the instruments at one's hand. He was proud to affirm that in the good men and true whom he saw around him he had helpmeets who would stand by him in difficulty and aid him by advice and loyal co-operation.

SIR STEUART BAYLEY'S REPLY TO THE ADDRESS FROM THE BEHAR PLANTERS.

Colonel Hudson and Gentlemen,—I am very grateful to you for the kind feeling which has prompted you to undertake this long journey for the sake of offering me a farewell address on my departure, and thus to give me an opportunity of bidding good-bye to some of the oldest and staunchest personal friends I have in this country. You allude to the part which I took in connection with the establishment of your Association, and you express your belief that the object which that Association sought to attain in the direction of putting the indigo industry in Behar on a sound footing has, to a very great extent, been effected. I am unwilling to detain you long, but I am glad to have an opportunity of stating publicly my satisfaction at the good work the Association has done; and it, in doing this, I go back to its earliest days, it is that I may justify my satisfaction by showing the contrast between then and now, and to vindicate the wisdom of the action taken by Sir Ashley Eden (for though he was good enough to ask my advice in the matter, the decision was his) in introducing a system of reform by means of the planters themselves rather than by the action of a Commission. It happened that on my return to India, 14 years ago, after a year's furlough, it devolved upon me, as Commissioner of Patna, in continuance of some correspondence between Sir Richard Temple and my locum tenens, to examine the records and report on the criminal cases connected with indigo which had taken place in my division during the past nine months. I found they amounted to over 150, and some of them were very serious. In reporting on them I noticed with some severity the main evils of the system, its unremunerativeness, the forcible exchange of lands, the illegal retention of grants after expiry of a lease, the impressment of, and insufficient payment for ploughs, carts, and labour. After noticing cases in which the courts had, in my opinion, dealt insufficiently with these cases, I added that even in quiet times indigo cases were numerous; and though I quite concurred with Sir Richard Temple that there were no such widespread manifestations of discontent as to render a Commission expedient, yet, the existence of a certain amount of discontent, manifest enough to local officers, and requiring very close watching and strong officers to deal with, was certain. After some further correspondence, Sir Ashley Eden promised to postpone action on the part of Government and to give the action of the Association a trial, and instructed me to answer them in his own words that "I really do desire to seek nothing but a thorough rooting out of the evils which are involved in the present system of managing many of the factories, and that this object being attained, I have every wish to see the cultivation of indigo in Behar maintained and protected." He went on to formulate certain reforms which he desired, and after some further correspondence, in which I took part as Secretary to Government, as to the limits within which these reforms were possible, the Association drew up its rules and set to work. Shortly after this I was removed to another sphere of action, and I can claim but little credit for the part I took in the matter. But the work of the Association went on, and three years afterwards Sir Ashley Eden had an opportunity, when at Sonapur, of publicly reviewing it in a reply to an address there presented to him. He expressed his unqualified satisfaction at the way the Association had fulfilled their promises, and at the success which had attended their efforts. He quoted largely from the successive reports of district officers, who one and all bore testimony to the improved relations between planters and rayyets, to the very large measure of reform which had been introduced, and to the effective interference of the Association when necessary. Not less emphatic was the testimony borne by Sir Rivers Thompson. Since I have succeeded to the charge of the province, I have had frequent opportunities of enquiring into the state of affairs, and have been glad to recognise officially the obligations under which the Government is to the Association. I have recently had occasion, for quite other purposes than my present reply, to go through all the recent annual reports of the Patna Division, and have read the references to indigo and to examine a large number of indigo sullas, and what I find generally to exist is this. The price given for indigo plant has been raised 30 per cent. nay, often more—the demand for land has been restricted to three cottahs in the bigah, which is willingly given; the indigo rayyet is protected from any enhancement of his rent. The impressment of and insufficient payment for carts, ploughs, and labour have absolutely ceased. The planters and their assistants have bound themselves not to retain possession of zeerut lands after the expiry of the lease, and many cases which would otherwise have involved protracted, ruinous litigation, have been settled through the influence of the Association, which has been found powerful enough to compel restitution when their member was in the wrong. On the other hand, the annual reports which used to devote pages to reporting on the relations between planters and the rayyets, and to the affrays and troubles which arose out of them, now refer to the subject only in a few brief sentences, generally stating that the relations are satisfactory, and alluding to the Association as an important part of the administrative machinery of the province. On the principle that the better your digestion works, the less is the attention you pay to it—this absence of reference to indigo disputes is significant; but for this reason and especially "because offences must needs come," and only three-fourths of factories in Behar are under the Association, I should be glad to see more space devoted to the subject. Anyway, your record is satisfactory. I am far from saying that there are no elements of danger and unsatisfactory features remaining in the indigo system. But I recognise the difficulty of removing these, and am satisfied that the Association has worked for thirteen years with perfect loyalty and steadfastness of purpose in the direction of improvement and in hearty co-operation with the authorities, and its history is one of good work well done, for which the Government cannot too warmly tender its acknowledgments. And now I have to ask how were these results brought about? In the first place, the material was there. The majority of the planters were honest men, who recognised not merely the expediency of putting their house in order, but the justice of the reforms demanded, and were willing to bind themselves by a self-denying ordinance if once the way was shown. But what is every one's business is no one's business, and each individual would be tempted to say, Why should I set up as a reformer and do otherwise than my neighbours to my own certain detriment? Some motive, however, was wanted to bring into action the latent energy and good feeling that existed. I am, I believe, not wrong in saying that from the day when Mr. Hudson became General Secretary till now, he has supplied this motive power, and it is to his energy, straightforwardness, and well-earned influence that the marked success of the Association has been due. I should be glad to learn that every factory in Behar had joined the Association, but in the meantime I recognise that your influence and your example must act beyond your own limits, and indirectly affect those who have not joined you. In conclusion, while again thanking you for your address, and for the extremely kind feeling you have displayed towards me personally, I can only add that your good work is recognised by Government, and express my hope that you will continue to work more energetically in the direction of reform, and that you will receive the full support and co-operation of the local authorities; and lastly, while wishing you all possible prosperity, to bid you, not as Lieutenant-Governor, but as an old friend of most of you, a sad farewell. (Loud applause.)

CONTEMPORARY POETRY.

AN EVENING'S ROMANCE.

CLOSER draw the curtain's fold,
For the night is bitter cold ;
Earth and sky alike are dreary,
And my heart and eyes are weary
Of the mist and clung all day
(Like a veil of saddest gray, Heavy and funereal,)
O'er the ash-trees, bare and tall,
O'er the dark green firs, that stand
Like grim mourners, hand in hand,
Round about an open tomb,
Saddened with a changeless gloom.
I am weary of the sight
Of those larch-boughs long and light,
Waving, waving to and fro,
With a motion sadly slow,
While the wind sighs out amain,
Like a human soul in pain.
As upon some sandy shore
When the tempest's rage is o'er,
And the breeze's trumpet-tone
Sinketh to a whispered moan,
Some pale form may lie outspread,
Lone, and ocean-stained, and dead--
Some young girl, whose flowing hair,
Strewn in mournful beauty there,
(When the waters come and go
With a tranquil ebb and flow,)
Rises on each wavelet's crest,
Drops when sinks the wave to rest,
Even so those branches bare,
Float upon the moaning air.

We will turn from thoughts like this
To a fairy realm of bliss--
It's ? Alas ! I am alone !
He, whose voice's kindly tone
Aye responded to mine own,
Wanders far away ; and those,
Who from dawn to daylight's close,
Flitting oft from room to room,
Chased away the wintry gloom
With the music of their feet,
And the sound of laughter sweet ;
Those gay sprites, those children fair,
Bright-haired, blue-eyed, laughing pair
(She whose ready fancy still Summons blithest scenes at will,
Hears the swallow's coming wings,
Sees gay flowers and summer things,

Where my sad eye only sees
Withered plants and leafless trees ;
And that younger one, so bright
With her spirit's sunny light,
That a stranger's eye will dwell
On her face, as if the spell
Of her happy beauty won Ev'ry heart it shone upon ;)
Each within her little nest
Lieth wrapt in joyful rest.
Yet, to-night, with spirit free,
Lone and silent though I be,
I will dream a poet's dream,
Sitting by the fire's red gleam.
I will gaze with joyful glance
On the woods of old Romance--
Those wild woods that never fade,
Flinging everlasting shade
Over paths of living green,
Winding, hoary stems between ;
Leading oft to nooks apart,
Where no sunbeam e'er can dart
Through the leafy screen above,
Whence the voice of hidden dove
Low replieth to the fall
Of the waters musical
Welling from a fountain clear,
Calmly glad as all things near.

* * * * *
Now along a pathway wide
(Whence diverge on either side
Lesser paths, with flowers bestrown,
Or with burnished moss o'ergrown,)
Comes a war-horse' stately tread :
High he rears his graceful head,
And the grass is flecked below,
As he moves, with foam like snow.
Sleek his coat, and black as night,
Save that one small star of white
Gleams upon his brow : dark red
Are his housings, thickly spread
With a maze of golden thread ;
On his bridle glitter fair
Wroughten gold and broid'ry rare.
Bears he forth a youthful knight,
Armed and ready for the fight.
He in garb of mail is drest,
And above his jewelled crest
Milk-white plumes are floating free,
Stainless as his fame can be.
O'er the dappled turf he rides,
And anon a sunbeam glides
Through the boughs above his track,
And its light is given back

By his armour's dazzling sheen ;
Then through depths of shades serene,
Where dark cedars o'er them bend,
Steed and rider calmly wend.

Now, in thought, some long-past fight
Flashes o'er the warrior's sight,
And his lance he proudly shakes,
While a muttered war-cry breaks
From his parted lips ; and now
Dear remembrance of the vow,
Uttered by a voice as sweet
As the hidden streams that fleet
Where the shadow deepest lies,
Bringeth softness to his eyes.
While his heart with fondness thrills,
At the thought of those far hills,
Where the lady of his heart
In her sadness dwells apart.
Suddenly a bitter wail
Rises on the summer gale.
Bound to succour all who need,
Lo, the knight hath turned his steed
Down a walk bestrewn with showers
Of the linden's yellow flowers !
Dim the light that passeth through Interwoven branch and bough ;
Heavy is the air beneath
With the blossoms' scented breath ;
Drowsy with their toil the bees
Hang in clusters on the trees,
Moving on, from time to time,
With their pleasant summer chime,
Answered by a merry note
From the leaf-hid cuckoo's throat.

Soon, beyond the linden shade,
Sees the knight a turf glade,
Folded in with mountain peaks,
Down whose sides in glitt'ring streaks
Many a singing streamlet flows :
In the midst, in still repose,
Lies outspread a crystal pool,
And within its waters cool,
Mirrored sleeps the quiet sky ;
And a pearly cloud sails by—
E'en as if an angel flew
O'er the depths of calmest blue.

But a woful sight is now
'Neath the cedar's whisp'ring bough ;
Stretched upon the turf lies one
Whose last battle-deed is done.
Falls the red sword from his hand,
Broken like a willow-wand ;
Helm and breastplate, all unbound,
Lie beside him on the ground ;
And the life-blood wellet slow
From a wound upon his brow.
At his head a lady fair,
Kneeling, with her long bright hair,
Strives to staunch the wound—in vain !
Gasping sigh and sob of pain
Echo back her saddest fear,
And she feels that death is near.
Wildly weeps she in her woe,
O'er his face the hot tears flow ;
Yet he speaks no loving word—
He whose heart was ever stirred
By the lightest grief that stole
O'er the sunshine of her soul !

Swift the wand'ring knight draws nigh,
Gazing with a pitying eye
On the lady's tear-stained cheek ;
Words of cheer he fain would speak,

But he feels how vain they were
In that hour of wild despair.
Quickly from his steed he springs,
Lance and shield aside he flings,
And the scarf his lady wove
(Precious token of her love)
From his gallant breast unwinds,
And about the stranger binds.
Vain his care—he writhes no more—
One deep sigh and all is o'er !

Then he strives with gentle speech
That sad lady's ear to reach,
Praying her, in brief, to tell
How such cruel hap befell ;
And at last, in accents weak,
Strives she all the truth to speak,
Pausing many a time to weep
O'er her hero's bloody sleep.
Tells she how for many a day
They had wandered blithe and gay ;
Tells she how her sire held sway
O'er a lovely land that lay
On the sunny Indian shore ;
Tells she how that warrior bore
From her gentle mother's side
Her, his fond and wedded bride.
Wrought he many a deed of fame
For the love of his dear dame ;
Strong and ready was his arm,
Rescuing the weak from harm,
Laying low each wicked wight,
As became a stalwart knight.
But, at last, a paynim hold,
With a shield of fretted gold,
And a lance of magic might,
Met him there in deadly fight :
Powerless the paynim's arm,
But for help of magic charm ;
Strong in that unearthly strength,
He had won the day at length.
Bent he o'er his porstrate foe,
When the lady's shriek of woe
Brought the Flow'r of Knighthood near,
And the clatiff fled in fear
(Warned of old to keep aloof
From that armour, magic-proof.)
* * * * *
Hark, the clock !—an hour hath sped,
And my sunny dream is fled—
Fled while I as yet could see,
Dimly, how the end would be ;
Ere the knight had laid the corse
Gently on his own war-horse,
And had passed adown the dell
To a holy hermit's cell ;
Ere the hermit's cares had shown
Life, in truth, was not yet flown—
And the lady's tears fell fast,
When the hour of woe was past—
Weeping more in joy's excess
Than she'd wept in bitterness !
Passed those phantoms of the brain,
Never to be seen again—
Save, perhaps, in dreamy trance,
'Mong the woods of old Romance !

Holloway's Pills.—Nervousness and want of Energy.—When first the nerves feel unstrung, and listlessness supplants energy, the time has come to take some such alternative as Holloway's Pills to restrain a disorder from developing itself into a disease. These excellent Pills correct all irregularities and weaknesses. They act so kindly, yet so energetically on the functions of digestion and assimilation, that the whole body is revived, the blood rendered purer, while the muscles become firmer and stronger, and the nervous and absorbent systems are invigorated. These Pills are suitable for all classes and all ages. They have a most marvellous effect on persons who are out of condition ; they soon rectify whatever is in fault, restore strength to the body and confidence to the mind.

NEWS AND OUR COMMENTS.

THIS is a busy and brilliant time in India. Christmas week has been enlivened and made memorable by a more than royal—an imperial connection. On Tuesday the Prince Imperial of Russia, in the course of his Imperial Grand Tour to the East, reached our shores and stepped on our soil. The Indian sensation of the season centres in primus in Indis—the Western Gate for all comers by the sea, great or small.

That gate seems to labour under a chronological curse. Some freak of destiny always interferes with people keeping time. Comers are invariably before or behind. If last year His Royal Highness Prince Albert Victor landed in advance by two hours of his appointment, this year His Imperial Highness the Czarewitch landed full two hours and a half beyond the fixed time. If the one by haste robbed a spectacle and lost a triumph, the other by delay spoiled a popular enjoyment, disgusted the officials and demi-officials who were on duty to receive the great stranger, and distressed all.

THE final forecast of the rice crop in Bengal for 1890 is hopeful. Since the date of the Agricultural Department's first report, there has been copious and seasonable rain over the whole province, improving the prospect of the crop considerably. In only a few districts of North and East Bengal, damage to the extent of 2 to 3 annas has been caused by excessive rain and floods. With this exception, a full average crop may be safely expected throughout Bengal. The tracts in which there is cause for watchfulness on the part of the local authorities are the Sudder and Chuadanga Sub-divisions of Nuddea, the Bongong and Jhenida Sub-divisions of Jessore and the Sudder and Sewan Sub-divisions of Sarun, where, owing to the floods, the outturn is likely to fall short of 8 annas.

The quantity of rice available for export in the coming year, calculated upon the statistics of the last year, is put down by Mr. Finucane at the same figure as that of the last, as the present year's outturn of the crop is expected to be nearly equal to that of 1889.

MR. P. C. LYON having joined the Staff of the Lieutenant-Governor as Private Secretary, Mr. H. Luson acts as Under-Secretary to the Government of Bengal, in the Judicial, Political and Appointment Departments. It is hoped he will be judicial enough and judicious in his new appointment.

ON the principle, we believe, of once vested cannot be divested, the Secretary of State has ruled that the Hon'ble Mr. Garstin, the junior member of Council, will continue as Provisional Governor of Madras, until the arrival of Lord Wenlock, the Governor elect, notwithstanding the return in the meantime of the senior member the Hon'ble Mr. Stokes.

A PARAGRAPH is going the round announcing not only a cure but a most simple and apparently effectual cure for that dreaded disease—diphtheria. It is fathered upon an English physician who is named as "the celebrated Dr. Field." It is said that, during an epidemic, a few years ago in England, while men were dying on all sides from diphtheria, although attended by the best physicians, Dr. Field's patients all quickly recovered. The disease is so rapid in its prognosis, that he was compelled to be his patients' apothecary and nurse. He carried his drug on his professional round. It was simple, though, if sufficiently ominous—brimstone and fire! Provided with a quantity of commercial sulphur, and his quiver filled with a number of goose-quills, Dr. Field went forth to fight the Demon Diphtheria in the epidemic-stricken district, and, by the blessing of God, was able to command victory in every instance. Such a record of unfailing success, without a single exception, is remarkable. In fact, the story rather strikes one as rather too good to be true. At any rate, the account is clearly no advertising trick. As the Faculty are powerless in presence of the enemy, and patients and patients' friends in their desperation are ready to seize at any stray straw for protection, we think we should be wanting in duty if we neglected to lay the recipe before our readers, from a conceit of philosophy or contempt of the means as inadequate to the end in view. So we quote the mode:—

"He put a teaspoonful of flowers of sulphur into a wineglassful of water and stirred it with his finger instead of a spoon, as the sulphur does not readily amalgamate with water. When the sulphur was well mixed he gave it as a gargle, and in ten minutes the patient was out of danger. Brimstone kills every species of fungus in a man, beast, and plant in a few minutes.

Instead of spitting out the gargle, he recommended the swallowing of it. In extreme cases, in which he had been called just in the nick of time, when the fungus was too nearly closing to allow the gargling, he blew the sulphur through a quill into the throat. After the fungus had shrunk to allow of it, he then gave the gargle. He never lost a patient from diphtheria."

So much for the brimstone treatment. Now for the fire!

"If a patient cannot gargle, take a live coal, put it on a shovel, and sprinkle a spoonful or two of flowers of sulphur or some stick brimstone upon it, then let the sufferer inhale the fumes, and the fungus will die."

BARMO Rameswar Proshad Narain Singh, of Muksubpore, in the District of Gya, early in the year, paid Rs. 15,000 towards the Lady Doctors' fund. He closes the year with another donation of Rs. 9,000 "to be spent in providing a building for the accommodation of the Lady Doctor attached to the Gya branch of Lady Dufferin's Fund and of native purdanashin ladies who do not wish to go to the common hospital for treatment." The occasion for this last liberality was the visit of Sir Stuart Bayley to Gya. At any rate, it is the wish of the donor that the donation should be connected with the late Lieutenant-Governor's name.

A BARBER in Ceylon committed the freak of shaving only the half of a Mussulman's head. For declining to shave the other half, the Mussulman went to Court charging the barber with mischief. No process was issued but the judicial advice was to have the unshaved half shaved.

THE long expected and promised reduction of mail postage is announced at last. From the first day of January 1891, letters from British India to any part of the United Kingdom will be charged at the rate of two and a half annas, instead of four and half annas, for every half ounce or fraction of half an ounce in weight. For the same charge, letters will be carried between Aden and any other part of British India, in either direction. The new rate applies to letters that will be posted in India after this week's mail, that is, despatched by the mail steamer leaving Bombay on Saturday the 3rd January 1891.

THE Senate of the Calcutta University is anxious to make the University something more than an examining body and to introduce election into its constitution. Towards those ends, it has adopted some resolutions asking the Government to amend the Incorporation Act. Lord Lansdowne has already anticipated the Senate partially. It was announced at the last Convocation, that the Degree holders would be allowed the liberty of nominating Fellows. As will be seen in the advertisement in another column, there will be a meeting, on the 1st January next, of the M. A.'s and holders of corresponding degrees in other Faculties, to choose from among themselves two gentlemen for recommendation for Fellowship of the University.

The University means to inaugurate the New Year with the exercise of the new right. In its eagerness, it forgets that the New Year's Day is a public holiday under law.

A GREAT hardship is about to be caused to plucked B. A. students, who had prepared themselves to appear at the ensuing examination to be held in February, by a recent Resolution of the Syndicate of the Calcutta University. These students were, under the rules as hitherto interpreted, only required to complete a course of continuous study for six months and, relying upon that interpretation, they had taken their admissions in affiliated institutions on various dates in September after the 1st of that month. The old interpretation hitherto followed by all the Colleges is now set aside by the Syndicate. Without questioning the correctness of their interpretation or their wisdom in adopting it, we should only ask them not to give it effect this year, as by that means a number of students, who had no notice of the change before taking their admissions and indeed before their preparations for the examination had been far advanced, will be unjustly prejudiced.

UNDER the new powers taken last year, by Act XV of 1890, the Governor-General in Council has fixed 70 millions of rupees as the amount of the coin and bullion received for currency notes which need not be retained and secured as a reserve to pay such notes.

A NEW rule has been added to the existing rules under the Indian Emigrants' Health Act I. (B. C.) of 1889. It came into force from the 24th instant and runs thus :—

"Every Agent forwarding emigrants to Cachar or Sylhet by steamer or country boat, from or through Goalundo, shall cause the emigrants, previous to embarkation or continuation of journey, to be placed for inspection before the Government Medical Officer appointed for that purpose at that port of embarkation."

THE Government of Bengal has taken to blundering as regards the Holidays. On the 3rd December, it notified three days' general not public Mahomedan holidays for the year 1891, namely, Eed-ul-zoha, 17th July.

Mohurrum, 15th August.

Fatiha-doaz-dahum, 16th October.

This week, the Calcutta Gazette corrects that notification and allows five days, thus :—

Eed-ul-fitr, on the 11th May if the moon be not visible on the 9th May. If the moon is visible the holiday will fall on the 10th May, which is a Sunday.

Eed-ul-zoha, on the 17th July, or, if the moon be not visible on the 7th July, the holiday will fall on the 18th.

Mohurrum, on the 16th and 17th August, or, if the moon be not visible on the 7th, on the 15th and 16th August. The 16th August is a Sunday.

Futti-doaz-dahum, on the 17th October, or, if the moon be not visible on the 5th October, on the 16th October.

SUSPICION upon suspicion! Crime upon crime! Public murder piled upon private murder! Murder none the less foul—nay, murder all the more outrageous for being the irrevocable vengeance of the blind Justice of the State! Last week, we noticed a criminal organization at Warsaw for massacre of the innocents. This week, it is our painful duty to record a judicial and gubernatorial murder of an innocent man in the same province—in the Novomeskovesky district. A sergeant was found murdered. The culprit could not be traced. A victim must be found. The Police were at work, and suspicions fell upon a young officer, named Perioff, son of a millionaire and a tea merchant at Moscow. The young man was tried, found guilty of the murder, and condemned to death. As soon as the father came to know of it, he telegraphed offering 200,000 roubles as bail for one week's respite. The Governor-General Gurko was firm. He would not allow any time for reopening the enquiry or for any attempts to save the young life, and ordered immediate carrying out of the sentence of court. So young Perioff expired on the gallows, for a crime of which he was immediately after proved to be innocent. The very next day of his ignominious death, a Jewish woman came forward and accused her husband of the crime which had already been expiated by the blood of Perioff, and the husband confessed that he had murdered the sergeant on suspicion of criminal connection with her.

At the opening of the winter session of the Lolesworth Club in the East of London, Lord Coleridge thus spoke of public speaking :—

"He would first, however, point out that fine language was worthless unless it was founded on thought, and thought had little value unless it was supported by knowledge and fact. It was said that eloquence had left the Bar, only lingered in Parliament, and was almost leaving the pulpit. But he had listened at the Bar to Sir Alexander Cockburn, to Bethell, to Lord Cairns, and to the greatest of all the advocates who, in his time, had adorned the profession, and was supreme in the art of forensic speaking, Sir William Erle, and he had no doubt that all these great men would agree with him in dissenting from that proposition so far as the Bar was concerned. Then it could hardly be said of a Parliament, which still numbered Mr. Gladstone among its members, and which but lately had, either in rapt silence or amid tempestuous applause, listened to Disraeli and Bright, that eloquence had departed from its portals. He was fully convinced that eloquence had lost none of its power in the Parliament of Great Britain. As to the pulpit, he had in past years, Sunday after Sunday, hung upon the almost inspired lips of the great Cardinal whom all England the other day followed to his tomb. Although he had himself never heard the late Canon Liddon or the Bishop of Peterborough, their names alone proved that eloquence had not deserted our churches. Language was the vehicle of thought and was the distinguishing feature which marked mankind off from the rest of the animal creation, and clearness of thought was therefore indispensable to the proper and effective use of language. He would conclude with the words of a wise and witty man—the present Bishop of Oxford. The Bishop and an excellent Professor were both members of the Hebdomadal Council at Oxford, and after a debate one day they walked home together. The Professor said to the Bishop that he was afraid he had been talking rather too much, as no doubt was the case. 'But,' continued the Professor, 'after all, the great distinction—isn't it?—is that a man can talk, but an ape cannot.' 'I don't know,' replied the Bishop, 'had you not better put it that an ape cannot hold his tongue, but a man can.' That precept of the Bishop he intended to follow."

NOTES, LEADERETTES, AND OUR OWN NEWS.

THE Parnellites and anti-Parnellites are still fighting like cats. Their grammar of warfare is sound, or rather their zoology. At Kilkenny, they could not, without obvious impropriety, fly at each other like cocks or dogs. There were several riotous meetings at Johnstown, in the neighbourhood of that habitat of the famous heroes of the feline race, over the local election. The Police interfered and prevented a collision. Mr. Parnell, finding no chance for his candidate Mr. Scully began abusing Sir John Pope Hennessy. But his denunciation was without vivacity or point—mere rage in words at random. Mr. Parnell called Sir John "a mongrel skinner." Mr. Parnell was never an artist in the nomenclature of vituperation like old Cobbett. But he ought to have done better than that against a man he hates for his pure life and fears as a rival. That "skinner," however, carried the election, by a majority of 1,147 votes, polling 2,503 against his opponent's 1,356, and will give Mr. Parnell further trouble when they meet at Phillippi. Mr. Scully has questioned the result, alleging undue influence of the priests. With vulgar effrontery, Mr. Parnell's followers proceeded to turn that defeat into a triumph. Mr. Parnell was not ashamed to receive an ovation after the poll and allowed himself to be chaired. He, in his turn, cheered up his supporters attributing the defeat of Scully to conspiracy and declaring his intention of continuing the fight for justice. Everything that goes against him is conspiracy with him. The courts are leagued against him. Mr. Gladstone and the Gladstonians have maliciously combined for his destruction. His own party have conspired his ruin. If hotel-keepers charge him that only shows a deep-laid plot. He breathes an atmosphere of treason. There is an ambush in every street and every lane against him. If he believes what he says he is truly to be pitied.

THE Yule Tide was ushered in Great Britain by a heavy fall of snow, for full 24 hours, on the 19th instant, and the season is terribly severe. At Nottingham, the river Trent is frozen over, so is the Severn at Worcester. The Upper Thames too is frozen. For five days, London was enveloped in snow, frost and fog—to the detriment of business specially in the docks and to the misery of the people. Dr. Barnardo's London Homes containing nearly four thousand waifs appeal to Englishmen in India for funds—for a generous Christmas gift, and a special telegram says that hundreds of street children are homeless and foodless.

A BUENOS AYRES telegram flashes a doleful wail from Cordova in the Argentine Province, where the canal burst destroying hundreds of houses and drowning one hundred people.

THERE is a general wages strike on the Scotch railways. The mineral traffic is wholly and passenger traffic partially suspended. It is at present confined to the North British line. Nine thousand hands are idle. Already the cities in Scotland are suffering from a scarcity of food and coals and factories are closing for want of fuel.

DOCTOR Koch has made further progress in his new discovery. The State buys up his lymph-making establishment. He receives one million marks immediately and another million from the yearly profits on the sales of lymph.

SIR Joseph Boehm, Sculptor-in-ordinary to the Queen, was found dead in his studio on the 12th, by the Princess Louise who had been on a visit to him. His remains were interred, on the 20th, at the Painters' Corner, St. Paul's Cathedral, beside the remains of Sir Edwin Landseer. The funeral was attended by the Princess Louise and representatives from the Queen and the Prince of Wales and the leading members of the Royal Academy of which he was a member.

The deceased had a strange career. A Hungarian by race, he was born in Vienna in 1834. His was no case of young genius under difficulties struggling with adversity at training time and even after fighting for existence with an inappreciative harsh world. Comfortably born, he had all the advantages of education and good bringing-up. Son of the Superintendent of the Austrian Mint, he was destined for his father's place. But the endless coins and medals in his father's cabinet and in the state mint, which he necessarily saw every day, and which he was encouraged to see constantly and to examine, fed a latent instinct for art. In stimulating in his son a love of not numismatology but coinage and coining, the father only developed young Boehm's taste in the direction of moulding substantial forms, so that he took up the art that deals with subjects in thorough relief. Among his untaught exercises, he executed such drawings of coins and medals for his father that the old man was delighted at such assistance so early, and at the prospect of finally, and soon enough, being able to retire in favour of such a successor of his own blood. These anticipations proved vain. The son was too great an artist to drudge as a mint modeller or even to be content to be the Superintendent of all the mints in Europe. The spell of beauty drew him on. He longed to feast on Nature and the works of man and to learn the mysteries of their influence and add works of his own. Sent out at a liberal outlay to complete in England his literary and scientific education begun in Austria, he divided his three years in the British Isles between Art and Science. Returning home, he entered the Imperial Mint with assured prospects. He now devoted himself with single-minded zeal to his love. No wonder he soon achieved a remarkable success. In 1856, when he was only twenty two, he won the Vienna Prize and, what was of the utmost practical importance to him, he obtained the privilege of exemption from the conscription. By this he had acquired such confidence in himself and such credit in his family that he allowed himself, and was reluctantly allowed, to abandon office in quest of fame and fortune in the exercise of Art. Vienna being too far in the rear of the empire of civilization, he sought the great world of Western Europe. So in 1862, he went to Paris. After a brief stay there, he finally settled in England. Next to Vienna he knew, and was known in, London best. He came home among the British, and he naturalised—that is, artificialised—himself here. The foreigner became an Englishman in law. Coming well-provided with funds, a gentleman by birth and education, and of excellent talk, in fluent English, he was easily admitted into society. His recognition as an artist soon followed. He had the good fortune of interesting the Royal Family. That is not necessarily a tribute to worth. The late Baron Marochetti too had been the favoured of English Royalty and aristocracy, and though certainly derided beyond his demerits, he was a poor statuary. It would seem as if our Royal Family in their appreciation wanted to make amends for their bad taste in having made so much of that Italian. The Hungarian was worthy of all regard. He challenged admiration by his grasp of subject, his boldness of treatment, and his technical skill. To him Art itself is indebted for much of the revived interest in sculpture. His claims are admitted on the Continent. He was recognised as a master in Italy itself, so contemptuous of the art pretensions of other nations. He was elected to the Academy of Florence in 1875, and to that of Rome in 1880. In England, he rose from Associate to Academician. He was more than a mere artist—he was one of the leading oracles of the day in art. And a right wise oracle was he. He was no extremist either in Pre-Raphaelitism or Idealism, but dead equally against conventionalism and inane formalism. He insisted on sincerity—on reality if you will, but not the vulgar realism so much in vogue at this moment on both sides of the Channel. And he educated the taste of his generation with a variety of choice works of every description instinct with life and meaning yet beautiful with a chaste beauty. As the favorite sculptor of Royalty and aristocracy, he has illustrated the annals of contemporary England with monuments, great and small, in marble, bronze or terra cotta. He has executed more colossal statues than any artist. He is wellknown in the East. We owe to his genius some of the most splendid works of art which adorn our great cities, the equestrian statue of the Prince of Wales in Bombay, the colossal statues of Lord Napier of Magdala, and of Lord Northbrook, the former equestrian, in Calcutta, the colossal statue of Sir William Gregory in Colombo, and last not least the fine Ashley Eden, in Calcutta, in marble, condemned to exposure to all the vicissitudes of Tropical weather. Happy was England to attract such a foreigner. In the great Maggyar, Sculpture has lost its highest exponent.

Now that the municipal elections are over, it is for the district authorities to analyse their character and redress any inequalities in representation which may be found to have resulted from them. It is for this purpose Government has wisely reserved in its own hands the power of nominating one-third of the Municipal Commissioners after the people have elected their larger proportion. But this object is likely to be frustrated if the authorities are blindly led by the retiring Chairmen in making nominations. Perhaps there is a precedent for this in the practice of the Calcutta Municipality as well as that of other municipalities under official Chairmen. But this should be no precedent, as there is a world of difference between an official and a non-official in deciding upon personal claims. A non-official retiring Chairman in making his recommendations is likely to have selfish and party ends in view which an official is always independent of. An official's tenure of office is sufficiently secure and he does not care so much for a following as for good men and true to work under him. The non-official, on the contrary, has only an eye to the continuance of his power or the ascendancy of his party. This being the case, the District Magistrate cannot be too careful in receiving counsel from such an interested quarter. We hear the Government Commissionerships are already put up for sale. Assure me of your vote for my re-election as Chairman, and I make you a Government nominee. Such is the way in which retiring Chairmen are reported to be going about in search of accommodating colleagues in the Boards about to be formed. We fear there is truth in the reports. The practice, in at any rate the district of 24-Pergunnahs from the introduction of Local Self-Government, has been to leave the nominations almost entirely to the Chairman. During a short period in which Mr. Skrine was in charge of the Municipal department of this Magistracy under Mr. Forbes, then on tour, there were indications that the practice would not be continued, but with the return of Mr. Forbes it was revived. All we can say is, if this is the actual practice, the sooner it were abandoned the better for municipal interests.

At Howrah, a great wrong is threatened on the Mahomedan community. The inequality of municipal representation due to election is too great to be redressed by any means. Out of 20 elected seats in the Municipality, 19 have been carried by the Hindus, the remaining one having fallen to a European. Of the 10 appointed Commissioners on the last Board, one was a Mahomedan and, it is reported, even this one representative of Mahomedan interests is going to be removed in favor of a Hindu. This is nothing less than an outrage, and we dare say Government will not allow it.

THE Universities have been far from an unmixed good in this country. They have no doubt given a powerful impetus to the numerical progress of education. The standard of education also, as judged by the course of studies and the examinations held, has been elevated. But the culture attained by the alumni lacks depth and solidity. The methods of instruction and examination encourage superficiality and this from the top to the bottom of the system. We are not unaware of the fact that there are scholars turned out by the Indian Universities who will hold their own with the graduates of any Universities in the world, but these are exceptional instances produced in spite of the system rather than by it. This superficiality has been constantly on the increase till there is now no educational effort of any kind unaffected by its blighting influence. The evil is a serious one, and it behoves the leaders of thought and opinion and action in the country to ponder the question and set to work to find out a remedy. We are therefore glad to find the attention of a practical thinker like the Ruler of the Upper Provinces has already been turned to the subject. Speaking the other day at the Canning College, Sir Auckland Colvin referred to this great defect of University education. That education is one-sided and develops the memory at the expense of the understanding, and Sir Auckland called upon the University authorities to endeavour gradually so to shape the course of studies by the manner and matter of the examinations as to remove the reproach of unsoundness. The remedies he suggested are the true ones. The matter as well as the manner of the examinations should be modified and that—as he wisely said—gradually.

THE activity of modern legislation has been always a topic of ridicule. Laws are manufactured with the rapidity of mills, and no wonder the products are sometimes so careless that they must soon give place to others. Thus the Legislature had an interminable work of making, repealing and amending, which made Artemus Ward wonder that Parliaments should meet in winter to undo the work of the previous summer and meet again winter and summer to repeat the same course of making and unmaking. That the statute book should be swelled to inordinate bulk in consequence of this never-ending activity is nothing but natural. The multiplicity of the laws is due also to causes independent of the perfunctoriness of their makers. The ever-increasing variety and complexity of civilized life make a constant demand upon the law giver. As we live we outgrow past conditions and there must be a continual process of legislative renewal to suit the altered circumstances. This has been at work in our Indian legislatures from the beginning till the time has come when, in the words of Sir Andrew Scoble, the Statute Book must be cleared of dead matter. The same necessity has occurred in Bengal, and thus we have the Obsolete Enactments Bill in both the Imperial and the Provincial Councils. Mr. Allen in charge of the Bengal Bill fully described its scope by calling it the waste-paper basket of the Bengal Council.

THE natives of India are avenged. After all the ridicule heaped by the Anglo-Indian journals upon the native press and public for their anxiety respecting the visit of the Heir of All the Russias, here comes the London Spectator with an article from the pen of one of the most brilliant of living writers and about the deepest speculator on Asiatic politics, the keynote of which is thus given at the very outset :—

“Rather hard on the chickens, to be compelled to welcome the fox in their own farm-yard, and to be exceedingly grateful for the honour done to them by the visit. That, we fancy, will very nearly express the feeling of the Anglo-Indians, when they see from Lord Salisbury's speech that the heir to the throne of all the Russias is actually on his way to make a tour through India, during which they will be obliged to play the attentive, and greatly complimented hosts.”

The same writer gives an old anecdote of how thirty years back a Russian savant was not permitted to travel in India for fear of the consequences to British sovereignty. And now the second man in Russia comes in in state and is welcomed by the rulers of India and allowed to be suitably received by the Princes and people.

THERE are indications unmistakable of a religious revival in our midst. Whilst only a decade before, Hindu students under English education were as a rule found ashamed to conform to the daily religious observances of a Hindu and never cared to bow to the figures of Hindu deities they met on their way, the very reverse is the case with the generation of students living now. The change has come about quietly. Not only is one not ashamed of Hinduism but it is openly and decently professed. There is no ostentation. There is no aggressiveness. There are perhaps none of the signs of a violent reaction. We cannot refrain from one regrettable feature among a section of the rising generation, viz., a tendency to asceticism which is doing much harm to society. The tendencies at work originating from an impulse given by the famous Hindu teacher Dwayananda Saraswati culminated probably in the late Hindu gathering at Delhi. An organized movement for the promotion of the Hindu religion has been determined upon at this gathering and all friends of the cause look forward with interest to the further steps that are taken to give shape to the scheme of the leaders. In the Punjab the revivalistic movement has taken a more practical turn. The object aimed at here is to correct the denationalising effects of English education, and both Hindus and Sikhs are founding schools where, in addition to the education required to equip the scholars for the business of life, religious instruction is given with the object of preserving their character and manners from the undesirable influences which a purely foreign secular training is found to exercise. Colonel Holroyd, Director of Public Instruction in the Province, notices these movements in the report which he has just written. The Hindu movement is led by the Arya Samaj and essays the revival of the pure Vedic religion. The Sikhs have established an institution with objects similar to those the Mahomedan founders of the Aligarh Institute have in view. “The proposed institution,” says Colonel Holroyd, “whilst affording a liberal education suited to the spirit of the age, will supply religious instruction, foster the national sentiments, and do all that may be possible to keep alive the valuable characteristics of the Sikh people, which seemed doomed to extinction in the absence of any decided effort for their preservation: as there is a strong tendency under existing conditions for the rising generation of Sikhs to become merged in the Hindu community by whom they are surrounded.” Another movement has been set on foot by the Pandits of Benares with the object of having school-text books purged of every thing likely to shake the belief of the Hindu students in their own national faith. All these signs point to a movement in the national mind which shows the strong conservatism of our people.

THE question has been raised in America, To whom does a fallen meteor belong? In the Forest City in Iowa, a meteor fell with a terrifying hissing followed by a fierce flame. The fragments were picked up by those who chanced to be present, and one of these was sold for 100 dollars. This raised the cupidity of the owner of the land whereon the meteor fell, and he claims the “find” as his. The matter has gone to Court.

THE Indian Congress began its sittings yesterday in Calcutta at the Tivoli Gardens. The Delegates who mustered some 1,400 strong were received by Mr. M. Ghose who, in giving them cordial greetings, entered upon a vigorous defence of the movement from the criticisms of its opponents. On the motion of Sir Romesh Chunder Mitter, which was seconded in Urdu by a Mussulman nobody presumably hailing from the North-Western Provinces and supported by the Patriot of the South, Rao Sahib Anand Charlu Bahadoor, Mr. Pherozshah Mehta, the fixed Chairman, was beguiled to his throne. The Chairman's rôle was ably performed by Mr. Mehta, who delivered an address of striking ability, showing culture and a wide range of contemporary reading. He spoke with great moderation, and if he could not altogether get over the vein of an advocate, it was always subdued. With two finished speakers like Mr. Ghose and Mr. Mehta, yesterday's audience at the Congress numbering 4,000 with delegates and visitors had a sufficient oratorical treat. In the meantime, the zeal of the congressists has received a damper from the Bengal Government, which has issued a circular pointing out that the presence of Government officials even as visitors to the Congress is undesirable, while their taking part in the proceedings is absolutely prohibited. Sir Charles Elliott has shown if not the courage of his convictions, at least loyalty to the Government of India. The thing ought to have been done long since. Certainly, some effective test was needed to differentiate the Congress from an idle Mela or a mere debating club. To-day, Baboo Kali Charan Banerjea amused the gathering in the character of Jehu in charge of the omnibus Resolution carrying all the previous talk of the Congresswallas. The younger of the Ghose Brothers managed to wreck much of his English reputation. Of the English speakers, Mr. Caine failed to make any impression. Mr. Yule spoke some weighty words.

No end of public entertainments at Calcutta this season! There is no embargo on the Christmas holidays as on the Doorga Poojas, and Christmas is more than lively. The chief caterer is, of course, Mr. Miln. The latest arrival is Mr. Fillis with his circus and menagerie, comprising lions, elephants, camels, cheetahs, baboons, &c. Performing camels are a novelty in Calcutta, and Mr. Fillis comes with high credentials. So large and well-assorted a zoological collection was never before gathered in one company. His circus opens on Monday. Particulars will be found in the advertisement in another page.

THE LATE ELECTIONS.

DISSATISFACTION is felt among the more sober and respectable classes at the results of the late municipal elections in the province. There are complaints of various kinds—of irregular attendance on the part of the polling officers—of wrongful force exercised by candidates upon voters—of the employment of threats and corruption,—all leading to vitiate the results. The elections being over, the Magistrate might well claim some respite, but far from it. Petitions are pouring in from all quarters for setting aside such elections and ordering fresh ones. At Naihati, the interests of candidates are said to have been prejudiced by the elections of three different wards being conducted by one officer on the same day, necessitating the proceedings being prolonged till after dark. At South Barrackpore, an old Commissioner of Agurpara has been displaced owing to the late attendance of the polling officer—the Assistant Superintendent of Police. The same thing occurred in North Barrackpore, and for the same fault on the part of the same man, the likelier candidate has not only been defeated but his canvasser has been ordered to be criminally prosecuted. As to the merits of the new elected candidates, there is the same complaint almost everywhere. In Sukchar, in the South Barrackpore Municipality, the old Vice-Chairman has been defeated by an untried man—one Tarafdar. At Sooree, the popular Chairman yields his place to a shop-keeper. Old Commissioners have lost their place more or less as a rule, and if there are exceptions as at Bali, there are probably exceptional circumstances to account for them. The most striking case of the whole elections being monopolised by one family through the influence of prestige and a kind of feudal power took place at the Zemindary town of Uttarpara. A correspondent of the Indian Daily News writes of it :—

"Of the total number 12, eight new Commissioners have been elected. They almost all belong to one and the same family—the family of Abraham. The following is the genealogical table :—

- No. 1. Chairman.
- No. 2. Cousin. His father's second brother's son.
- No. 3. and 4. Two brothers, cousins. His father's youngest brother's sons.
- No. 5. Cousin. His father's sister's son.
- No. 6. Brother-in-law of No. 2, and is at present on leave, and will shortly rejoin his appointment at Chittagong.
- No. 7. Is a hereditaire protégé.
- No. 8. A servant's nephew.

A servant's servant.
Servant, Madam.
Shakespeare."

A parallel instance has occurred at Muktagacha, where five of the six elected seats have been carried by the Acharjya Chowdhuries.

The candidates elected are generally raw and indifferently material. The qualifications of voters have been pitched too low and the more respectable voters having been swamped on former occasions by the unwashed, unkempt rabble, they are getting more and more indifferent in the matter. They can hardly be brought to attend the polling booth, and thus the field is left entirely to the ignorant people who little realize the importance of the power their franchise gives them. The evil is not a small one, and we look forward with great misgivings to the future of Local Self-Government under the election system as it is. An amendment of the law appears to be unavoidable, if a collapse is not courted. The qualification of voters must be raised, and that of candidates for election made distinct from that of voters as under the Calcutta Municipal Act. An educational qualification for the latter, if not for both, is also necessary. Other alterations are also called for, and we believe a desire for the revision of the rules of election is now visibly stirring the public mind. Our own information about the late elections is of the same character from all places. The better candidates have been rejected in favor of those who stood on about the same social footing with the rank and file of the electors. The effect of this upon the better sort of men who had been induced on the present occasion by a regard for public interests to stand cannot but be to make them shun future candidature. A municipality, for instance, is in a bad way, and a re-cast of its personnel is required to arrest its degradation and give a higher moral tone to its management. With such end in view, men of knowledge and character had in some places been prevailed upon to stand—only to be defeated. Under the elective system framed as it is, their defeat is now surprising. The system is not without its recommendations. At any rate, it is the only check upon the abuses of a bureaucratic despotism or an alien autocracy. But its details are bad and the working worse, and it is having a continually deteriorating influence upon the electors. Men who headed the polls at previous elections now find the tables entirely turned. The explanation is easy. The voters want men with whom they can mix on equal terms of familiarity. They also find that their votes have a marketable value, and poor as they are, they see no reason why they should not turn them to account in these days of hard living. They find there are candidates ready not only to pay them but to flatter them—to make all sorts of promises of relief from taxation and other reliefs—and they say to themselves, why not give a trial to these in preference to others from whom they are always divided by a wide gulf of social distinction and who never stoop to those electioneering devices of which they have now got a relish. For the rest, the dignity of a Municipal Commissionership has been lowered. It could never enter into the heads of the voters at first that any body and every body might under the law be a Municipal Commissioner. They had always been accustomed to see the office filled only by the higher gentry. But the encroachment upon the sacred precincts of the Municipal Board in occasional instances in past years, has broken the spell, and they now go in for men of their own social status without fear or hesitation. These are principles of general application which have operated more or less in all the recent municipal elections. But especial causes were also at work to affect the elections in particular places. For instance in a manufacturing town near Calcutta there were two Factory Europeans among the candidates, and they carried away almost all the votes of the factory work people and of carters and porters. These votes were far from being freely given but were obtained by coercion. In an election contested under such circumstances, perhaps the defeated candidates are entitled to congratulation on their failure, for the lesser the votes, the greater must be one's credit for fairness. Where votes are given for a price or under force, their number must bear an inverse proportion to the real merit, or at any rate the honesty of the candidates. We have no objection to the Factory being represented adequately. It is the best paying holding and is entitled to an influential voice in the expenditure of the Municipal Fund. It is a pity, however, they take no interest in the work. In the last Board they never attended except when the Chairman had stuck in the mud and had to be pulled out of it and, that being done, they would retire from the meeting. They have got themselves in the new Board to do the same function, viz., to prop up the same man's position. There would not be much to blame in this either, if the person to whom they were so staunch were worthy of the support. His incapacity is a matter of general notoriety in the town and yet the admiration of these Europeans continues unabated. Were this not the case, we would regard their return by election or by nomination with pleasure. Europeans, whatever their deficiencies, soon make them up and improve with their position. We would even like the idea of their occupying positions of command in the municipality, but unhappily, as things are, their connection is as blighting an influence as that of their idol. This is however far from being an exceptional case. It is coercion of one kind here—while at other places, as at Utterpara, it is of another. We think some legal remedy should be provided for it. The evil is too great to be met merely by the appointment of Commissioners reserved in the hands of Government as an antidote to the vagaries of that fickle instrument—Election.

We have dwelt at such length on the subject to show the imperative necessity of correcting the effects of election by the Government nominations, so far as it may be possible to do so by that means.

THE DRAMA IN CALCUTTA.

WE are once more fortunate in having, even though for a brief season, a theatre of the higher drama among us. We have now at the Corinthian a company able to represent with fidelity and force the grand old Elizabethan plays. Mr. George Miln, the leader of this histrionic band, is an actor of a calibre rare in any country, one who, under the auspices of a liberal and intelligent lessee, might contest the highest honours of the profession in any capital. He has, to begin with, all the prime physical requirements of a tragedian, bone and sinew, muscle, nerve, wind, in a stately figure. Bating the slightest occasional disposition to rant, he is a powerful declaimer. His is no declamation of an attitudinising elocutionist, but the delivery of a real character—a hero in fact—who suits his voice to the action, and his action to the dramatic situation. He is at the head of a good company with some actors and actresses of considerable pretensions and distinct promise. He is a careful manager too. It is difficult in a place like Calcutta, which has had no Shakespearean representation for many years, to present the plays of the great dramatist with accuracy of external details and the required accessories, so as to produce the full illusion. Mr. Miln has done his best to overcome the disadvantages of what in the domain of the liberal arts, is a provincial capital at best. His début was somewhat of a disappointment on this head. Since then he wisely thought fit not to depend entirely on the "properties" of the place of amusement selected by him. He has had new scenes painted. And now he is giving performances which no man or woman of any pretensions to culture ought to miss. To the educated members of native society who inherit and cherish the cultured tastes of their predecessors, caught from the teaching and example of the Anglo-Indian critics, connoisseurs and amateurs of other days—the Horace Hayman Wilsons, Charles Trevelyan, Macaulays, Parkers, Stocquellers, Richardsons, Torrenses, Humes, Bellevs—specially those who do not expect to visit London, New York, Boston, San Francisco or Melbourne—this company is a godsend. To Indian students in particular who are studying English literature and European history and manners, this is an opportunity for easily picking up the most valuable knowledge, an opportunity which they would be culpable to neglect. Years of attendance in the class room and of plodding through endless commentaries, one conflicting with another, and at lifeless notes, which usually shirk the real difficulties, cannot give the vivid impression—the true understanding—that the dramatic spectacle will impart.

On Tuesday, they played for the third time the Merchant of Venice with eminent success. The house appears to have been ill kept and it has not been properly cleaned and washed for such high class entertainments and elegant society. In consequence, the lighting loses half its effect, with a tendency to make darkness visible. But the get-up on the stage was good. When the curtain disclosed the 3rd scene in Act I., with the canal and the bridge in the distance under a Southern sky, one seemed transported to Venice. The Court of Justice was good too. Jessica was a dainty little Jewess, in appropriate costume. But the other women were dressed like modern Europeans. Above all, Portia as the Doctor of Law was not sufficiently disguised. The intrusion of the white tunic through the long black gown too rudely suggested the prominence of an interesting limb of the softer sex for the illusion sought to be created. But Shylock was most tastefully done up, in accordance with the actor's conception of the character. It is a noble figure, weighted with years and their mellowing grace, not weighed down by age and its cares and infirmities. Whether "this was the Jew that Shakespeare drew" or "mighty" Marlowe conceived (in his Jew of Malta,) he was a true Mediterranean Hebrew. With his delicate curls he looked like an ancestor of the Disraelis who came from Southern Europe. It thus goes without saying that Mr. Miln follows Kean. How different Herr Bandmann's miserable stooping old wretch, bowing and cringing! Far be it from us to detract from the honour of that great personation. But, without doubt, the Kean exhibition of Shylock, like the Coleridge view of Othello, is the more pleasant and perhaps better worthy of the Poet. And it was presented to perfection. Mr. Miln's Shylock is a masterpiece of acting such as we do not hope to see rivalled—at any rate within our opportunities. The great speech expressive of the identity of Jew and Gentile and, we may in this country add, of Asiatic and European, of Christian and Hindu or Mussulman, was delivered with burning incisiveness. The Jew's conduct in Court as the champion of the strict letter of the law was truly remarkable. Portia, we must confess, was rather disappointing in the earlier scenes. Indeed, we hardly wonder if she failed in the difficult prose dialogue at the beginning (Act I., Scene 2.) Such laboured stuff as "If to do were as easy as to know what were good to do" and the rest of it was inexpressibly tedious in the delivery. She was more in her element in the verse. Her voice seemed unequal to the demand. However she improved as the action proceeded, and at last agreeably surprised all with some good speaking and acting.

Yesterday, before a fairly filled house, Mr. Miln gave his second performance of Macbeth. The chief rôle was of course filled by Mr. Miln who as the Thane of Cawdor surpassed himself. His success was simply unprecedented—in Calcutta, at any rate, in this generation. His conception of the character of the hero does not differ in the main from the one play-goers and students are familiar with, but, as in other plays, he departs in some of the details, and his original touches were highly striking. From beginning to end, his acting was superb. The passion of Macbeth was vividly represented. How a brave simple but superstitious mind was first spurred to ambition by the prediction of a triad of witches, how the agitation was kept up by the unnatural woman his wife, until he reluctantly consented to kill his kinsman and master the King, who was so kind to him, while a guest under his own roof, how he shrank from the deep damnation of the deed and was goaded to it by his serpent Eve, and all the ulterior consequences on his feelings, life and fortunes were brought out as distinctly and delicately as the most exacting taste could wish.

The audience was kept spell-bound throughout by the wizard. Step by step the interest of the business advanced till a tremendous effect was reached. At every speech and each change of colour, we thought we saw through the heart of the brave good man going to the bad and sinking deeper and deeper in the mire. If we might venture on a suggestion to so profound a meditator on the creations of Shakespeare, we should say that in his rendering Macbeth and his Lady were too loud after the murder when common caution required silence. The courtiers at the banquet too seemed paralysed even before the self-detection of the usurper. But these, if anything, are mere spots in the sun. Miss Kate Douglas as Lady Macbeth was a surprise of high excellence. In fact, this was the play that was best acted all round. All the characters were well rendered. Mr. Harry Hill as Duncan was truly kinglike. Mr. J. B. Atholwood was an appropriate Banquo. Above all, Mr. W. J. Montgomery's Macduff was an important part exceptionally well rendered.

DEFAMATION OF PUBLIC SERVANTS.

No. 30Pub./1678, dated Simla, the 5th September 1890.

From---C. J. Lyall, Esq., C.I.E., Offg. Secretary to the Government of India, Home Department.

To---The Secretary to the Government of Bengal.

In a General Order of the Government of India in the Foreign Department, dated the 15th March 1847, it was laid down that a Government officer is at liberty, if his public conduct in the transaction of his official duties is impugned, "to seek redress through the usual official channel by an appeal to the Government he serves, and that the Government so appealed to will afford him every opportunity of vindicating his character." Though the matter has since that date been dealt with in a confidential paper, no subsequent orders regulating the course to be followed by Government officers for the vindication of their acts as public functionaries have been generally circulated, and the result is that the practice in this respect is not uniform in all Provinces. The Governor-General in Council therefore deems it desirable to prescribe the procedure which should be generally observed in future. I am accordingly to convey the following instructions, with the request that their purport may, with the permission of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor, be conveyed to the officers serving in the different branches of the administration in Bengal.

2. It is a standing order that, without obtaining the authorization of the Government to which he is immediately subordinate, no officer of Government is permitted to have recourse to the Courts for the vindication of his public acts, or of his character as a public functionary, from defamatory attacks. In giving authority to institute proceedings, the Local Government concerned will decide whether the circumstances of the case are such that the Government should bear the costs of the proceedings, civil or criminal, or leave the officer to institute the prosecution or suit at his own expense; and in the latter case it will also determine, in the event of the matter being decided by the Courts in the officer's favour, whether he should be recouped by Government the whole or any part of the costs of the action.

3. I am to explain that the ruling above laid down does not affect an officer's right to defend his private dealings or behaviour in any way that he may be advised; but his official reputation is in the charge of the Government which he serves, and it is for that Government to decide in each case whether the institution of proceedings to vindicate his public acts or character is necessary or expedient.

RESOLUTION.--The question raised by the Government of Bengal in the correspondence included under the first of the heads mentioned above extends over a wider range than the treatment of three-decked vessels of the type described. That question may be thus stated : Vessels with a lower deck (between-deck) and upper deck (poop and main decks) have been altered by running a covering (or shade deck) over the main deck, and shutters have been attached to the sides of the main deck for the purpose, as stated by the owners, of sheltering the passengers on that deck in rough weather. As the vessels stood originally, the main deck was an upper deck, and the owners contended that the attachment of shutters to it made no material difference, and that they should be allowed to continue to treat it as an upper deck, the shade deck being regarded as an additional upper deck.

2. The Government of Bengal considered that this contention was inadmissible, and that the closing in of the sides with shutters practically converted the main deck into a between-deck. Thus whereas the owners claimed that such a vessel should be treated as one with two upper decks and one between-deck, the Government of Bengal ordered that it should be treated as a vessel with one upper deck and two between-decks.

3. The order in the case issued by the Government of Bengal was withdrawn on the advice of the Advocate-General that it was not legally competent for the local Government to issue such an order under the terms of the Native Passenger Ships Act. The case is now referred for decision by the Government of India, and in referring it the Government of Bengal expresses the opinion that, if the main deck and the shade deck are both treated as upper decks, the vessels will be able to carry more passengers than they should be allowed to carry; that, in fact, the law and the rules now in force permit of the carriage of an excessive number of passengers; and that they should be amended in such manner as to provide more space for passengers carried on each deck.

4. The questions thus raised are of the first importance alike to the owners of the vessels engaged in this extensive trade and to the Government whose duty it is to require that suitable provision shall be made for the safety and reasonable comfort of native passengers. As regards the classification of the main deck, the Government of Madras has already given a decision contrary to the decision proposed by the Government of Bengal, and such a large proportion of the native passenger traffic is carried on from and to Madras ports that the opinion of the Government of that Presidency is entitled to great consideration in all matters affecting the traffic. Only the Government of Bengal has as yet complained that the law and rules as to the allotment of space permit overcrowding.

5. The question of the treatment of a main deck when covered by a roof and closed at the sides can only be decided after actual investigation of the facts and conditions. Is it the fact that the attachment of shutters deprives the passengers on the main deck of light and air to such an extent as practically to make that deck a between-deck, and to require that additional space on the awning deck should be allotted to the main deck passengers? Or, on the other hand, do the shutters merely improve the conditions of the main deck, giving the passengers additional shelter while they retain all the advantages of an upper deck? The question has given rise to so much controversy between the Government of Bengal and the managing agents of the British India Steam Navigation Company that it is expedient that it should be fully investigated by competent and impartial authorities. His Excellency in Council has accordingly come to the conclusion that the most satisfactory way of dealing with the two questions in issue will be to refer them to a special Commission of Enquiry for consideration. It is proposed that the Commission should consist of a member or members to be nominated by each of the local Governments which are concerned with the native passenger traffic, namely, the Governments of Madras, Bombay, and Bengal, and the Chief Commissioner of Burma. With them should be associated three or four non-official members, representatives of the large shipping companies identified with the same traffic. These companies have their head-quarters at Calcutta and Bombay respectively, and the Chamber of Commerce of each city should be invited to nominate the gentlemen whom it considers most representative of the interests concerned. The Commission will be presided over by Surgeon-Major A. S. Lethbridge, M.D., C.S.I., Inspector-General of Jails in Bengal.

6. The Commission will enquire into the facts at such ports as it considers necessary, and will invite and receive evidence from witnesses. It will probably not be necessary that the non-official members of the Commission should travel with the Commission to any places outside the limits of the Presidency in which they are nominated, but the same facilities for doing so should be given to them as will be given to the official members if they wish to accompany the Commission on its tour. The President will decide, in communication with each local Government, whether or not it will be necessary for any local official member to travel beyond the limits of the administration by which he is nominated.

7. The Commission, after making all needful local enquiries, will return to Calcutta, where it will hear such further evidence as may be placed before it, and settle its report for presentation to Government.

8. The Governor-General in Council considers that it is expedient to take advantage of the appointment of a Commission to refer to it for consideration the other questions touching the operation of the Native Passenger Ships Act which are now before the Government of India.

Of these, the first is a proposal to require the attendance of a medical officer on board native passenger ships. This proposal has been more than once pressed on the Government of India, but has been set aside on the grounds that a medical officer is not required for the passenger traffic beyond Indian limits, this being quite trifling except in regard to pilgrims and emigrants, for which classes the law requires the appointment of a medical officer; and that for passenger traffic within Indian limits there is no real need of a medical officer, the longest voyages being between the Madras and Burman coasts, occupying more than five days only at certain seasons of the year. Most of the traffic is conducted on what are termed in the Act "short voyages," being voyages of not greater duration than 120 hours, as will be seen from the table appended to this Resolution. The Government of Madras now proposes that a medical officer should be required on every vessel, irrespective of the duration of the voyage, when the number of passengers carried exceeds 200; the Chief Commissioner of Burma would require one only on a long voyage when the vessel carries more than 300 passengers; the Government of Bombay would also require one only on a long voyage, but would fix the minimum number of passengers at 100; and the Government of Bengal proposes that a medical officer should be required on every vessel proceeding on a voyage of greater duration than 48 hours, irrespective of the number of passengers.

It will be left to the Commission to endeavour to reconcile these conflicting proposals, and make a recommendation which shall be acceptable alike to the Government and the carrying Companies.

It should consider whether a medical officer is required or not; if required, what class of medical officer should be employed, and in what classes of vessels.

9. With these three questions the Commission may also expediently consider the other less important questions raised in the correspondence. These are (1) whether the passenger space in the between-decks of a vessel should be divided by a rail or rope in order to prevent such a calamity as occurred on board the steamer Bhandra when a number of passengers were killed and wounded by being hurled from side to side of the vessel as she rolled heavily in the trough of the sea; (2) whether a luggage rack should be required in such spaces, the space so assigned for luggage to be deducted from the space measured for passengers; (3) whether boats and life-saving appliances should be required in accordance with the requirements of the Board of Trade for passenger vessels; and, if not, whether any, and what, modifications are required in the existing rules. The suggestions of the Port Officer of Bombay made in connection with the foundering of the Vesta may also be considered.

10. The Commission will also enquire into any other cognate matters that may be brought before it, or which it may itself consider proper to be examined. In dealing with all these questions, the Commission will bear in mind that the Government is not desirous of imposing on the traffic any restriction which is not essentially required to secure for the passengers the minimum space and quality of accommodation which are necessary for comfort, health, and safety, or which will involve increased expenditure in the form of higher fares in excess of the means of the persons who ordinarily use the vessels in question.

11. On intimation from the local Governments and the Chambers of Commerce at Calcutta and Bombay of the names of the gentlemen whom they propose to serve on the Commission, it will be formally constituted.
